44 Dead, 18 Lost as Storm Rakes Coast

Woman Slain In Bedroom; Clew Found, Janitor Held

Roomer Discovers Body of Federal Worker, Beaten to Death.

Police Abandon Robbery Motive

Pair of Stained Trousers May Hold Solution to Brutal Slaying.

A pair of blood-stained trousers, police said last night, may hold solution to the brutal slaying of Mrs. Florence Goodwin, 34-year-old Government worker, strangled and beaten yesterday in her second-floor bedroom at 1102 Sixteenth street northwest.

Searching the fashionable boarding house where Mrs. Goodwin had been resident manager for the last three years, investigators discovered the trousers and prepared for an analysis of the stains. A colored janitor, employed part-time by Mrs. Goodwin was held for questioning last night.

Mrs. Goodwin, an employe of the procurement division, Treasury Department, since 1931, apparently was the victim of an unmerciful attack. Her head was crushed by repeated blows and her neck and face bore imprints of powerful fingers, police said.

Motive Not Determined.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, after performing an autopsy late yesterday, said he was unable to determine whether Mrs. Goodwin had been criminally assaulted.

Investigators, led by Capt. Ira Keck, assistant chief of detectives, were at a loss to explain a motive for the murder. The woman's room, they said, apparently had not been ransacked for the purpose of robbery.

Mrs. Goodwin, according to detectives, was slain as she lay in bed. She was clad only in a thin night garment and bathrobe and was found sprawled across the blood-soaked bed.

As police assembled evidence throughout the house, Detectives Elmer Dalstrom and W. V. Christian, of the Third Precinct, discovered a 2-foot furnace shaker lying across the grates of a furnace in the basement. The shaker was stained with blood and particles of hair clung to one end. It is believed Mrs. Goodwin's assailant used the shaker in the murder.

Roomer Finds Body.

The woman's body was discovered shortly before 11 a. m. Mrs. Alphonzo Billups, a roomer in the house, alarmed when Mrs. Goodwin failed to appear at her usual hour in the morning, investigated and found the body. She summoned the houseman, Carl Dockett Chase, colored, 25, of the 900 block of W. street northwest, who called police.

The door to Mrs. Goodwin's room, police were told, was partly open when Mrs. Billips went to investigate. A stairway leads from a hallway outside the room to a rear entrance to the house downstairs.

Coroner MacDonald said there was no evidence that Mrs. Goodwin struggled to fight off her attacker. She apparently was surprised by the intruder, he said, and had no time to scream or protect herself.

Chase, the houseman, was questioned for several hours last night, but presented nothing to aid investigators. He said he reported for work at his usual hour—8 a. m.—yesterday and carried a bundle of laundry to the fourth floor. He told police he passed Mrs. Goodwin's room, but noticed nothing unusual. He neither heard nor saw the woman, Chase asserted.

Skull Is Crushed.

Marks on Mrs. Goodwin's head, Coroner MacDonald announced, indicated she was struck four times. One of the blows crushed her skull from ear to ear. Fingerprints on her face and neck, he added, showed the murderer stifled her cries.

Mrs. Goodwin, roomers in the house said, usually arose about 7:30 a. m. and was scheduled to report at the Treasury Department pro-

Democrats Oust 'Renegade' Mayor; His Successor Dies

Pensacola, Fla., Sept. 18 (AP).—The Pensacola city council, in a surprise session tonight, by a vote of 8 to 1, ousted Democratic Mayor H. Clay Armstrong because of his support of the Republican national ticket, and named a successor who fell dead less than an hour later.

The new mayor was O. L. Moyer, 70, who died of heart disease after telling the council "You have elected a good, strong Democrat."

Officials said Max Bear, the only man who voted against replacement of Armstrong, would act as mayor pro tem.

Armstrong left New York tonight for Pensacola. He called at Republican national headquarters there this week to reassert his support of the Republican ticket. The special meeting was called when councilmen heard of his visit to G.O.P. headquarters. The council had twice deadlocked previously on the issue of ousting him.

Landon Lashes At New Deal's One-Man Rule

2,000 Young Republicans Cheer Kansan's Attack on Administration.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 18.—Using language even more emphatic than that of his Maine speech, Gov. Alf M. Landon hammered again this afternoon at his contention that the issue in this campaign is between representative government and "organized authority wielded by one man."

Addressing 2,000 cheering young Republicans, gathered here from every State, the Presidential candidate challenged the economic reasoning of the New Deal.

"It is reasoning," he said, "based upon seven years of hard times instead of upon 150 years of progress."

Landon told the young men and women in his audience that the New Deal is trying to make you believe that there is no future under the American system. He said it was argued that business is no longer capable of making its own decisions and that the Government must make these decisions to an increasing extent.

Difference Cited.

"There is a fundamental difference between this argument and the policy we have always pursued," he said. "In the past we have had regulation of business by the Government—not direction and management of business by the Government. Under the one—in the policy we have always followed—the Government tells us what we can not do. Under the other, the Government would tell us what we must do.

"Under one system the Government is the umpire, enforcing the rules made by the people. Under the other system, the Government itself plays the game—the people are mere puppets."

The Kansas Governor said that he knew there were abuses in the economic system that need to be corrected and declared that "we propose to do all that is within the constitutional power of Government to eliminate them."

He pledged a tightening of the rules governing business, but no attempt to manage business.

Ceases Pulling Punches.

The speech bore out predictions following his talk last Saturday at Portland, Me., that Landon from then on would carry the fight to the Administration, that he would cease to pull his punches. In some respects the talk this afternoon was a repetition of much that he said in Maine. His reference to the issue being between Government by the people and one-man rule was more emphatic than a similar reference in the Portland speech.

Landon made it clear in both his most recent major speeches that business regulation would not be abandoned should he be elected. In his Maine speech he even went so far as to approve some of the New Deal regulatory laws. In his talk today he emphasized particularly

U. S. Bulwark Of Truth, Says The President

Chaffs Alumni on Fear of Democrats; Quotes Euripedes' Words.

Text of President's Address on Page 7.

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 18.—President Roosevelt stood on his old college grounds today and asserted "in this day of modern witch-burning" it is the duty of Harvard and the Nation to "stand for freedom of the human mind and to carry the torch of truth."

In Memorial Hall, where rain forced the afternoon exercises to be held, the Chief Executive addressed a large audience of alumni of the university from which he graduated 32 years ago and where two of his sons now are rounding out their educational careers.

Freedom of thought has been "exiled from many lands which were once its home," he said, but added: "Truth is great and will prevail."

The President left here shortly after 4 p. m. (Eastern standard time) for Washington, changing his plans to go to Hyde Park in order to be with his wife, who is ill with grippe. He is due in the Capital tomorrow morning.

Banters Audience.

Early in his speech, Mr. Roosevelt, in bantering vein, reminded his hearers that in the past many Harvard alumni were "sorely troubled" when Democrats sat in the President's chair at the White House. Then he quoted Euripides to the effect that the things feared have not come to pass.

On Harvard's bicentenary celebration in 1836, he said, "many of the alumni of Harvard were sorely troubled concerning the state of the Nation. Andrew Jackson was President.

"On the 250th anniversary of the founding of Harvard College, alumni again were sorely troubled. Grover Cleveland was President. Now, on the 300th anniversary, I am President.

Ends Tercentenary.

His speech brought to a close the university's three-day tercentenary celebration and a memorable day in his alma mater's long record of achievements.

Cheered by crowds standing in the rain on the route to Harvard's historic "yard" from Allston station in Boston the President refused offers of shelter and sat throughout the morning exercises in a sylvan theater in a driving rain that stopped only a few minutes and then poured down again just before he retired to a college building for a private luncheon with James Bryan Conant, president, and other university officials.

Damn Fools, Fuller Calls Sympathizers Of Sacco, Vanzetti

Boston, Sept. 18 (AP).—Former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller characterized as "damn fools" tonight 28 Harvard alumni who injected the Sacco-Vanzetti case into the Harvard tercentenary celebration.

The group, in a pamphlet issued today a few hours before President Emeritus A. Lawrence Lowell was to introduce President Roosevelt, called on brother alumni to study the record of a committee headed by Lowell which studied evidence in the case.

Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, radicals, were executed in 1927 for murder of Alessandro Berardelli, a pay-roll guard, in the course of a South Braintree holdup in 1920.

"Discover," the pamphlet requested, "what happened to the mental processes or your alma mater's president."

Lowell declined comment.

The booklet, entitled "Walled in This Tomb," charged discrepancies in the report of the Lowell committee, which was formed at Fuller's request after legal appeals were completed.

Rebels' Fort Blasted, 850 Feared Dead

Two Mines Touched Off by Loyalists, but Foe Keeps Fighting.

Americans Flee Madrid.

Three Washingtonians, Albert Nufer, commercial attache at the United States Embassy in Madrid, and the Misses Freda Wasner and Gertrude Lustig, were among Americans departing from Madrid last night, the State Department announced. The cruiser Quincy had been ordered back to Alicante, Spain, from Gibraltar to remove the Americans.

Others whose names were announced here were Mrs. John Livera, of New York, wife of the general manager in Spain of the International Banking Corporation; Mrs. Gertrude Krieger, of Chicago; Mrs. Beatrice Cebrian Sanz and two children, of San Francisco, Mrs. William P. Carney and son, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Herlinda and Miss Marna Seris, Luis Sanjorge, Ramon Pardillo, all of New York; Reginald Berry, of St. Louis; Miss Erlina Muller, of New York State.

Fort Is Blown Up.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Toledo, Spain, Sept. 18.—Half of the 1,700 men, women and children within the Alcazar fortress were believed tonight to have been blown to bits or maimed by the explosion of two mines, each tamped with a ton of TNT.

The two mines were touched off simultaneously, giving the impression at first that only one mine had been exploded by the government leaders of the siege against the rebel citadel.

Two similar mines tonight were set to be exploded at the wish of the government leaders, who postponed further action to give occupants of the fortress another chance to evacuate the women and children within.

Tower Ripped From Blast.

The terrific blast of the two mines set off today ripped the whole southwest tower from its base, the massive stone blocks of the fortress plunging into heaps.

Great gaps were blasted in the west and south walls which were the only ones standing after the explosion.

A 15-minute artillery bombardment pounded the wreckage of the citadel, then 1,500 picked government assault guards stormed the debris.

The defenders still alive swung their machine guns in deadly arcs against the government attackers, who sought to drive them from their redoubts at bayonet point.

Take Refuge In Cellar.

Their women and children were believed to have taken refuge in the dungeon-like cellars far underground which apparently had not been crushed by the explosion.

At the entrance to the tunnels leading to the cavern, the male defenders fought off the invaders in a bitter six-hour struggle.

The mines were set off after hours of intense bombardment from two government six-inch guns posted on a sloping hill near the famous citadel.

Most of the city's population had been evacuated to the countryside in the early morning hours. Great crowds gathered to watch ominous pillars of smoke rise from the powdered ruins.

Tons of debris spattered on the roofs of houses near by, pieces of their shattered roofs clattering into the street.

The detonations of hand grenades roared through the cavernous wreckage down into the pits, where women and children huddled together in terror.

Late in the day Lieut. Col. Luis Barcelo, government commander in Toledo, announced he had abandoned all hope of wiping out the remaining rebels in the military school today.

Barcelo, wounded in the leg as he led the first attacking party over a pile of smoking debris in the morn-

Electric Utilities Expert Is Dissatisfied in Job, It Is Believed.

J. D. Ross, electric utilities expert named to the Securities and Exchange Commission a year ago by the President, plans to resign from the commission shortly after the November elections, it was reported here yesterday in a well-informed quarter.

Ross, on a tour with delegates to the World Power conference, could not be reached last night. He was reported to feel that the SEC does not offer him the scope for his specialized knowledge that he expected to find here.

He is said already to have discussed his proposed resignation with some members of the commission, but may delay the announcement until later this year.

For 20 years head of the Seattle Municipal Electric System, one of the outstanding systems of its kind in this country, Ross was brought here by the President to take the post formerly held by Ferdinand Pecora. The utilities holding company legislation was pending in Congress at the time.

Ross had served in his Seattle post under both Republican and Democratic local administrations, but was described here at the time as a "New Dealer." The President was said to share his views on the utility question, and once had consulted him on the St. Lawrence waterways project. Partisans viewed him as a foe of private utilities.

French Games Show Native Troops' Value

Castres, France, Sept. 18 (AP).—The French army's first maneuvers near the Spanish border in 23 years have demonstrated the value of native colonial troops in strengthening mainland forces, officers said today at the conclusion of the war games.

Gen. Gaston Billotte, inspector-general of colonial troops, praised the African native soldiers on their endurance and military aptitude.

New York Skyscrapers Rock As 75-Mile Gale Lashes City

Plate-Glass Windows Smashed, Awnings Torn, Air Traffic Grounded and Shipping Delayed as Fringe of Hurricane Strikes.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 18.—A slashing gale whipped through the steel and stone canyons of New York and across the flat-lands of Long Island tonight as the metropolitan area braced itself against the fringe of a tropical hurricane.

Whirling up from the South, a 75-mile-an-hour gale swayed skyscrapers, ripped down awnings, smashed plate glass windows, grounded air traffic, delayed shipping and hurled thunderous waves against the Long Island shore.

Millions of home-going New Yorkers chased their headgear and tugged with umbrellas in the gusty streets. They were protected from the full force of the blow, however, by the buildings.

Up in the tower of the Empire State Building, a wind speed indicator swung between 50 and 75 miles an hour. Building officials estimated the tower was swaying three quarters of an inch off center. Allowances were made for a full foot of sway by the builders of both the Empire State and Rockefeller Center towers.

60-Mile Wind at Noon.

A week ago, newspapers reported a "storm of great intensity" was moving upon the South Atlantic seaboard, but even by last night it still was just a headline to New Yorkers.

About noon today, however, the Empire State weather observatory reported a 60-mile-an-hour wind. The skies blackened. Lights went on, although it was barely mid-afternoon. Men in offices became uneasy, worrying about families still in summer cottages along the coast.

A smokestack on the Temple of the Covenant was cut down when it began to sway under the savage wind. Falling debris smashed two large plate glass windows in the lower East Side. Pent house dwellers scurried across roofs removing terrace furniture and plants.

The Holy Name Society transferred an outdoor meeting to St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Harbor traffic in the sheltered upper bay was virtually normal, but five outbound liners lay at anchor in Gravesend Bay, their

500,000 Freed From Prisons As Hitler Gift

Amnesty to Political Offenders on Birthday in April Revealed.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Sept. 18.—Freedom, it was disclosed today, was Reichsfuehrer Hitler's birthday present to more than 500,000 political prisoners.

Der Fuehrer decreed amnesty for minor political offenders last April to celebrate his forty-seventh birthday anniversary April 20.

An official communique summed up the beneficiaries of his largesse, showing fines and jail sentences against 240,340 Germans were cancelled and the pending cases against 254,674 others were dismissed.

Critics of the Nazi regime as well as its followers were freed.

Some of them had been put behind bars for violating the law "in excessive zeal for the national socialist cause." Others committed offenses grouped under such headings as "perfidious acts against the state," "insulting party leaders" and "abuse of the pulpit."

Followers and critics were included in Hitler's decree of amnesty.

Granting freedom to men and women convicted of offenses committed from "overenthusiasm" for Nazism, he provided only their acts must not have resulted in death and must not have been committed out of a mean spirit.

Coast Guard Sends 3,000 Into Wide Battle Against Ravages of Hurricane on Seaboard

Sending boats, airplanes and 3,000 men into action, the United States Coast Guard yesterday flung its resources in the fight to save lives and property from the ravages of the elements in one of the greatest hurricanes that has swept the coast in years.

Ships at sea flashed in periodic reports.

And methodically, almost casually, the radio operator there sent and received messages and checked progress of the rescue work on a gigantic blackboard.

Interest centered on the activities of four vessels on the way to ships in distress.

One hundred miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, the 250-foot cutter Modoc pounded to the assistance of the disabled steamer El Almirante and her crew of 36. She took her in tow and, immediately, radioed word of her success.

The message, picked up at Arlington Naval Radio Station, rattled in on the teletype a few seconds later. "El Almirante taken in tow," was all it said.

Later, the United Press reported three Coast Guard men had been injured in passing lines to the stricken vessel. The Modoc's message had ignored

60 WPA Workers, Adrift, Rescued

Ripping up the Atlantic Seaboard, a capricious tropical hurricane, the worst since August, 1933, promised to blow out to sea early today, leaving at least 44 dead and 18 missing in its wake.

The storm, whose center was 100 miles off New Jersey last night, was expected to sweep near Nantucket, Mass., this morning. Its attendant gales battered New York City and the New England Coast early today, causing the skyscrapers on Manhattan's canyons to sway before the might of the wind.

Forty-two of the crew of the fishing steamer Long Island drowned in the mountainous seas of Delaware Bay yesterday when pounding waves splintered their craft. Three others were saved after they had clung to spars and bits of wreckage.

Two Others Drowned.

Two other men were reported drowned as the hurricane drove thundering surf against the coastline from North Carolina to New York.

One lost his life when waves wrecked his cabin cruiser near Atlantic City. The other victims was in Maryland.

The list of missing was greatly reduced early today with the finding on Albemarle Sound, near Edenton, N. C., of two barges occupied by about 60 WPA workers.

Adrift in the windswept water after they broke their moorings at the height of the hurricane, the barges went aground near the Inland Waterway. Earlier fears had been expressed that the craft were being swept out to sea, all hands aboard. Three colored men, still missing, were believed to have been drowned, according to the Associated Press.

The Weather Bureau's storm warning last night read:

The Atlantic Coast storm was centered at 8 p. m. about 100 miles east of the Southern New Jersey coast, apparently moving northeastward with somewhat diminished intensity. However, it is still attended by gales over a wide area with winds of whole gale force near its center. It is probable the storm center will pass close to Nantucket, Mass., Saturday forenoon. Storm warnings remain displayed on the Atlantic Coast north of the Virginia Capes to Eastport, Me.

Eight Men Unreported.

Eight men on a leaky fishing boat were unreported since they left Cold Harbor, N. Y., and on Maryland's Eastern Shore seven persons were missing.

The raging winds, which sometimes attained a velocity of 100 miles an hour, beat along the coast from Cape Hatteras across the Virgina Capes, and then roared into

King Will Offer Plan to Simplify Tax Structure

Utah Senator Suggests That British System Be Used as 'Yardstick.'

By the Associated Press.

Suggesting that England's system of tax administration be used as a "yardstick," Senator King, of Utah, ranking Democrat on the Senate Finance Committee, said yesterday he would present plans for "drastically simplifying the tax structure" at the next session of Congress.

He termed any major tax reduction "impractical at the present time," but asserted revenue laws could be "simplified so that the average citizen can understand them."

Decentralized administration by local boards, which he said had functioned "most satisfactorily" in Great Britain, may be included in his recommendations.

Their findings probably will serve as the basis for any drastic revisions, King said, adding that the meeting of the joint committee might be called soon after the Presidential election by Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi.

King said he was giving special study to the capital gains and losses provisions of the income tax statute.

"These clauses leave a wide field for honest differences of opinion and are largely responsible for thousands of tax appeal cases now before the court," he explained.

"I think it might be possible to eliminate the tax on capital gains and the accompanying reductions for capital losses without losing a penny of revenue."

Some nuisance taxes which bring in little revenue also might be abandoned, he suggested.

his proposal to "tighten the rules governing business." He drew a wide distinction, however, between business regulation and business management by the Government.

The Governor spoke in the barn-like city auditorium, which was not completely filled, but the crowd made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in numbers. The gathering stood and cherred for three minutes when the candidate entered the auditorium. He met its cheer, waving his hand repeatedly as the band added to the din by blaring the notes of "Suzanna."

Landon spoke from behind the garish blue and gold "pulpit" which is hauled around the country and used wherever he talks. It is wired for radio microphones and therefore has become a permanent prop of the campaign. It seems, however, to be a trifle too low, and as the candidate reads all his speeches word for word, he talks most of the time with his chin against his collar. He stood during his entire speech today with his thumbs hooked into the pockets of his gray trousers. He wore a blue tie with Kansas sunflowers.

J. Kenneth Bradley, of Connecticut, chairman of the National Young Republican Federation, presided. He said State leaders of the organization had pledged themselves to complete a Young Republican organization in every county in the United States. The gathering, however, was not made up entirely of Bradley's group.

Also present were members of the First Voters League and members of the newly organized Victims of Future Taxes.

Just before he spoke, Gov. Landon conferred with a group of Midwestern farm journal editors who, with the Governor, were guests at a luncheon given by Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas. The editors talked of farm policies which Landon is expected to discuss in his speech at Des Moines next Monday.

Describes Meeting.

"They were so courteous to each other that I expected one of them to withdraw from the campaign at any moment," he said. Landon laughed heartily.

At the meeting of Young Voters almost as enthusiastic a reception as that accorded Landon was given to Ronald Bridges, head of the Young Republican organization in Maine, when he reported that Republicans there had elected a senator, a Governor, all the State's members of Congress and a Republican Legislature. Bridges is a brother of Gov. Bridges of New Hampshire, who last Tuesday defeated former Senator George Moses for the Republican senatorial nomination in that State.

Gov. Landon during the morning held open house for visitors to Topeka. He spent most of the morning in the big reception room outside his office, shaking hands and greeting all visitors.

The Victims of Future Taxes were present in the persons of Alfred M. Lilienthal, who is also president of the First Voters League, and Robert B. Murray, head of the "Victims." Both live in New York. They presented Gov. Landon with the insignia of their organization, a farmer's cheap straw hat and an arm band decorated with a "barrel rampant." The barrel is the emblem of the group and represents what they expect to wear if the Government keeps up its present rate of spending. Murray said "Victims" already had been organized in 350 colleges and universities.

"The first voters," Murray said, "already are aroused over President Roosevelt's reckless program of taxation to pay for New Deal fallacies which imposes on young America a heavy burden.

"Every Government bond issued by the New Deal must be met by future taxpayers when they no longer can take in the soothing syrup of the President's smooth radio voice."

The two youthful leaders announced a "barrel show" in New York, which will include persons they describe as "living models," who will walk about the streets clothed in barrels and carrying appropriate signs.

Politics and People

Events of Last Week Appear to Have Favored Cause of Gov. Landon.

By Franklyn Waltman

SUMMING up the developments of the last week on the political stage, it would appear from the surface of things that in the aggregate they favored the cause of Gov. Alf M. Landon. At all events, the Republican strategists feel much better than they did ten days ago, which aptly demonstrates that these alternating spells of despondency and hopefulness on each side cannot be regarded as accurate barometers.

WALTMAN.

Indeed, the last week might be regarded as a crucial one in the development of the Republican campaign. Had the Democrats broken even in Maine, the campaign for all practical purposes would have been ended. It could have been marked down as forecasting a Democratic victory of landslide proportions in November, just as it did four years ago.

The Republican victory in Maine does not necessarily forecast a Democratic defeat in November. But it demonstrated that the trend in that State is back toward the Republican Party, and taken along with the results of primary elections held in Michigan, Massachusetts and even Wisconsin, indicated that the Republican cohorts again have become fighting machines—which they decidedly were not in the 1934 elections.

Boiled down, all this means that while President Roosevelt may have the odds distinctly in his favor, Gov. Landon has a chance of winning. It all depends on how far the trend towards the Republicans has developed in certain pivotal States and whether there is sufficient time between now and November for the Republicans to make up the ground they lost in past months by their ineptness and lack of fighting spirit.

In view of what has happened during the last week it is absurd for Democratic Chairman Farley to continue the pretense that he is expecting a Roosevelt landslide as great, if not greater, than that which occurred in 1932. If Jim Farley ever really believed that, he should be under no illusions now. Mr. Roosevelt may win—but he will know he has been in a battle.

But even if Mr. Roosevelt wins—as most observers now think he will—the Democratic majority in the House will be substantially less than it has been and there is reason to believe that some of the Democrats will squeeze through by such narrow margins that they will have little enthusiasm for future New Deal experiments.

The Republicans are now confident they will pick up between 60 and 75 Congressional seats in districts normally Republican strongholds. They believe they have a fighting chance for another 50 seats now held by Democrats. Thus it would appear that the more than 2-to-1 Democratic majority in the House will be substantially diminished, if not wiped out.

The best efficiency test of a political machine is its ability to get out its vote. Mention also has been made in this place of the fact that the vote cast in the Republican primary in Michigan this week was substantially larger than that cast in the Democratic primary. The result in Maine spoke for itself.

But these two States do not stand alone. In the Massachuetts primary, with the Democrats in control of the State government and with Federal patronage in their hands, which means they have more paid party workers, the Republicans also made a better showing. There were 419,953 votes cast in the Republican senatorial primary, with Henry Cabot Lodge 3d receiving 354,039 of them. The Democratic total was 387,942, with Gov. James M. Curley, the successful candidate, receiving 246,424.

Thus on the face of these figures the Republican organization is stronger than the Democratic. When it is considered that many of the votes cast for the two primary opponents of Gov. Curley will go in November either to them—they are running as Independents—or to Mr. Lodge, a Republican victory in the senatorial race seems certain.

The fighting within Democratic ranks in Massachusetts will hurt President Roosevelt and when it is considered that in 1932 he carried this New England State by a plurality of only 63,000 or 52 per cent of the vote cast in the major parties, his prospects there this year appear slim indeed.

In Wisconsin, which is a sure Roosevelt State, the Republicans in their primary also made a better showing than they did two years ago—thus indicating that the resurgence of Republican activity is not a local development but is fairly widespread.

In one other major political development of the week it would seem that the Republicans came off with the advantage. That was the strategy of the Democrats to get Frank Knox, the Republican Vice Presidential nominee, out on a limb and saw him off.

Mr. Knox, who many people think has been talking too much and too loosely, about two weeks ago in a speech at Allentown, Pa., made the assertion that as a result of New Deal fiscal policies not an insurance policy or bank account in the country was secure. It was a sensational statement but it failed to create any noticeable alarm. Indeed, had the Democrats let the statement lie where Mr. Knox had thrown it, it quickly would have been forgotten and would have been without effect.

The Democrats, however, did not let the Knox statement lie. They thought they had Col. Knox out on a limb and with glee they set to work to saw off the limb. The President summoned a group of insurance company executives to meet with him to question them about the Knox charge, on the apparent theory that they would have no other choice but to defend the integrity of their companies and policies.

But the scheme leaked out and the night before this meeting the Republican Vice Presidential nominee returned to the attack, asserting he was not speaking of the monetary worth of insurance policies and bank accounts but of their actual value in the face of a threatened inflation in this country. This was a theme the New Deal couldn't combat as easily as it could the specific dollars and cents value of an insurance policy.

The result has been that the White House succeeded in doing exactly what Col. Knox was striving to do—to concentrate attention on the inflationary aspects of an unbalanced budget and New Deal fiscal policies. Building that issue around an insurance policy humanizes it, as it were, and makes it of primary concern to many millions of persons who otherwise would be indifferent to arguments about the effect of fiscal policies. In that incident, it seems, the Democrats stepped right in—with their chins out.

Strife of G.O.P. In Md. Is Ended By Pact on Nice

Young Republicans Pledge Resources to Program; Hamilton to Speak.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 18.—Maryland Republican forces, making plans for the entertainment of National Committee Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, were cheered today by peace within their own ranks and support from anti-New Deal Democrats.

A truce for the duration of the Presidential campaign was proclaimed by the Maryland Federation of Young Republicans, one of the first and one of the most articulate of the anti-Nice factions. Herry Leeward Katz, a director of the federation, telegraphed national Republican leaders that his group had reached at "satisfactory, definite understanding with Gov. Harry W. Nice and we are pledging all our resources and efforts behind his program."

Edgar Allan Poe, Baltimore attorney, assumed the leadership of the latest anti-New Deal organization to be formed. It was the Maryland Jeffersonian Democrats, which already has sent, it claims, letters to 10,000 Maryland Democrats.

Urge Repudaition.

Poe said the group would "urge complete repudiation of the New Deal Party, either by negative action in refusing to vote for Roosevelt or by positive disciplinary action in voting for the candidate most likely to defeat Roosevelt.

Gov. Nice outlined the plans made by State leaders for greeting Hamilton when he arrives for a political rally on Monday. Hamilton, the Governor said, will arrive at the Washington Airport at 4:40 p. m. Monday. He will be met by the Governor, Senator Hary Photebus of Somerset County, and William P. Lawson, chairman of the State central committee.

Hamilton will address more than 1,000 Republican workers at the campaign headquarters in Maryland, the Governor said. Later the national chairman will speak to a dinner gathering. Gov. Nice said that mor ethan 1,000 tickets to the dinner had been sold to both Democrats and Republicans. Hamilton, Lawson and Senator Phoebus will be overnight guests of the Governor at the executive mansion after the speech.

Meanwhile, Charles P. Taft, adviser to Gov. Landon, told a Republican group tonight that President Roosevelt "deserves great credit for the way he dramatized the idea of social security," but he criticized the law enacted by the New Deal.

The old-age-assistance system, Taft told the Women's Coalition for Landon and Knox, has allowed the States to pay inadequate pensions and permitted "a number of Governors to make the State old age pension department an important cog in their political machines."

Even staunch supporters of unemployment insurance, Taft said, agree that the job insurance section of the law has not achieved its objective and is unconstitutional.

Taft contended the taxes proposed to support the contributory old-age insurance plan constitute a "tax on the poor" and "when collected do not go into cash benefits to the old."

"These tremendous sums of cash do not even go into the reserve," Taft said, "but are spent each year to buy Government bonds, old ones the banks have, or new ones that cover up the Government deficit and waste. These bonds make up the reserve, not cash that can pay benefits."

Taft said experts had advised against creating this reserve, but President Roosevelt and Secretary Morgenthau insisted upon it.

"If Roosevelt wins," Taft said, Congress will go ahead destroying this poor man's purchasing power that our people need to live on, because it will enable Congress to continue their deficit's and pay them out of these taxes. Few citizens, even the poor that pay the taxes, will be the wiser.

"With Roosevelt out of the White House, this whole plan will be put on a sensible basis, even if it takes Democratic votes in Congress. The American public will be saved the taxes needed to build this vicious reserve."

Forced Labor Charge Brings Kidnap Citation

Laurel, Miss., Sept. 18 (U.P.).—Kidnaping charges were filed tonight against Leroy Rogers, 32, Jasper County farmer, who allegedly abducted four Laurel colored youths and forced them, at gun point, to pick cotton on his 14-acre farm.

Text of Landon's Speech

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 18.—The following is the text of Gov. Alf M. Landon's address before the National Conference of Young Republicans:

Mr. Bradley, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is gratifying to me to get your most encouraging message. You represent young men and women throughout the Nation, young men and women many of whom have the responsibility this year of casting their first vote.

This Nation has always taken pride in its young voters. It has taken pride in the fact that our first voters always look forward to an active participation in our national elections.

There has been a real reason for this pride. Our first voters are not content with the past. They have their eyes on the future. They have the courage and the ambition to go forward. They are determined to build a better America. They, more than any other group in our Nation, assure progress.

History and experience teach that America is made over in every generation. It is made over, not by wishful thinking; it is made over, not from blueprints in Washington; it is made over by the high hopes and the honest toil of the American people.

Proves Young America Awake.

Your presence here today is proof that you are following in the footsteps of the generations of youth that have built America. It is proof that young America is not asleep. It is proof that the youth of this land is not willing to surrender liberty for a phantom security. I welcome you to the comradeship of a great cause.

This is no ordinary campaign in which we are engaged. It is not a campaign based upon the usual partisan issues. It is a campaign that cuts across all party lines. Today the issue is the kind of government, and the kind of country, we are to have in the years to come.

Suffering and Distress.

We see for example, the horrible suffering and distress of continued unemployment. We see people who have lost their life savings through no fault of their own. We see factories idle and fields uncultivated when millions of our fellow citizens are in need of food and clothing. And we see others apparently able to ride through the storm without personal sacrifice and without personal hardship.

It is mighty hard for anybody to maintain courage and confidence in the face of such conditions, and this should be borne in mind by every employer. It is especially hard for our young people who are trying to get a start. As they look around they find an economic system that seems to have broken down. Regardless of their training and skill, many have found it impossible to get a job. Many have been forced into the ranks of the unemployed—forced either to remain dependent upon their families, or to seek aid on the relief rolls.

To me, these young people are among the saddest victims of the depression. In my own mind they have a place apart. For the others have had jobs at one time or another. They have known what it means to earn their own way. To them the depression has meant hardship and suffering, I know. But to our young people who never have been able to find employment, the depression has meant more than this. It has robbed them of the opportunity they had dreamed of for years—the opportunity to be self-supporting, to be independent, to stand on their own feet.

Must Maintain Faith.

For these young people it is not sufficient merely to provide food and clothing. We must do more. We must convince them that our form of government has not failed. We must prove to them that our economic system still is capable of giving them work at full pay. We must maintain their faith in the eternal value of human liberty.

To those whose faith has not wavered, this may not appear such a difficult task. But let us not deceive ourselves. The other side presents very alluring arguments.

It is said, for example, that we have come to the end of an era—that our "industrial plant is complete"—that henceforth we must live on what we have. To those who give little thought to our history this may sound like good reasoning. But it is not good reasoning. It is a reasoning based upon seven years of hard times instead of upon 150 years of progress. Of course we no longer have a geographical frontier. But we have a frontier that is far more important from the point of view of the youth of this country. That is the frontier of new inventions. That was the frontier developed by the automobile industry. And that industry alone has absorbed many times as many people as ever moved across a geographical frontier during a depression.

Another argument is used by those who are trying to make youth believe that they have no future under the American system. They say that American business men are no longer capable of running their own businessmen are no longer cisions which will assure the maximum good for the greatest number. They would have the Government make these decisions to an increasing extent.

Far More Dangerous.

This argument, let me warn you, is far more dangerous—far more insidious, than the contention that we have come to the end of an era. Because on the surface, it appears to be nothing more than an extension of the policy we have followed throughout our history.

But there is a fundamental difference between this argument and the policy we have always pursued. In the past we have had regulation of business by the Government—not direction and management of business by the Government. What is the difference between the two? It is very simple. Under the one—in the policy we have always followed—the Government tells us what we cannot do. Under the other, the Government would tell us what we must do. Under one system the Government is the umpire, enforcing the rules made by the people. Under the other system, the Government itself plays the game—the people are mere puppets.

Under the one system we have independence, liberty, freedom. Under the other system we lose our independence. We lose our liberty. We lose our freedom. And we lose all this without obtaining security—that security promised by those urging an ever-increasing accumulation of powers to be wielded by a President of the United States.

To the young voters among your friends and neighbors I ask you to take this message: Tell them the choice before this country, in this campaign, is not whether there have been abuses in the economic system that need to be corrected. We know that there are such abuses and we propose to do all that is within the constitutional power of Government to eliminate them. The issue is not whether the intentions of the present Administration are good or bad.

Real Issue of Campaign.

The real issue as we see it is this: The present Administration apparently believes that there is no future for this country. It has accepted the idea that we have reached our peak—that ahead of us is a large standing army of unemployed; that, in consequence, the Government must play a greater and greater part in managing the details of our daily lives instead of confining itself to the expanding field of regulation in the public interest.

The Republican Party, on the other hand, utterly rejects this philosophy. It believes that America still is on the upgrade, that we can eliminate unemployment, that the Government should tighten the rules governing business, but should not attempt to manage business; that, in a word, America will once again be a Nation where youth can be confident of its future.

I have an abiding faith in the unselfish purpose of the young voter—in his desire to make his Government responsive to the needs of a great Nation—in his determination to make his vote count for his country.

Move to Crush Fascism Begun By Syndicalists

Conscription of All Able-Bodied Men Sought; Meetings Called.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 18.—Conscription of all able-bodied men and sweeping government reforms to stamp out fascism were demanded tonight by powerful Syndicalist elements in Madrid.

The Syndicalist ultimatum was made public concurrently with stringent regulations limiting the stay of foreigners in Spain. The demands included:

1. A revolutionary governmental system giving workers a direct share in the administration of public affairs.

2. Socialization of banks, railroads, industries, and church properties.

3. Delegation of authority to maintain public order to the militia.

4. Reorganization of the judiciary.

5. Cancellation of all forms of domestic indebtedness to "give the people a fresh start unencumbered by bourgeois obligations."

Meetings Called.

Mass meetings in Madrid, Malaga, Valencia and Barcelona were called for Sunday "to permit the people to voice their united approval of our great program."

The universal conscription demanded was necessary, the Syndicalist said, to force slackers into the militia ranks. At present enlistment is purely voluntary.

(An uncensored dispatch from Burgos said that the Fascist Jose Antonio Primo de Rivera, son of the late monarchist dictator, Gen. Miguel Primo de Rivera, was the foremost choice of Fascists for dictator of Spain should their cause succeed—and if he still is alive.)

Under the Syndicalist plan, Premier Largor Caballero, but recently installed in his present office, would be president of the council.

Instead of ministeries, the Syndicalists would set up "departments" of foreign relations, public order, war, air, navy and communications.

The regulations covering the asylum in the country of foreigners were made necessary, the government officials said, by Fascist activities of certain foreign elements within the country.

The minister of the interior ordered all foreigners to surrender their documents of identity with civil governors of the director-general of public safety within the seven days beginning Sunday.

The documents will then be examined and returned, with instructions on how long each foreigner may remain in Spain.

Passports under the decree also must be presented within 48 hours by all foreigners entering the country. All those whose documents are not approved by September 27 must leave the country, immediately.

ing, decided to bring two 6-inch and two 3-inch guns within 200 yards of the wrecked fortress to pound away at it through the night.

Two were placed on the Plaza de Zodocover, Toledo's principal square, and two were stationed below San Servando Castle on the south bank of the Tagus River.

Engineers who supervised the laying of the 100-yard long mines, each containing a ton of TNT have said that simultaneous percussion of the last two mines would be sufficient to crush the underground redoubts.

Overhead three rebel pursuit planes sought to bombard the attackers who swarmed over the ruins, but were driven off by government anti-aircraft batteries which had been placed in position for such a development.

Rebels Take Orio.

St. Jean de Luz, France, Sept. 18 (AP).—Insurgents, diplomatic dispatches reaching here tonight said, captured the entire city of Orio from Spanish government defenders.

Driving on toward Bilbao, their next major objective, the rebels, under Gen. Emilio Mola, were said to have advanced as far as Zarauz, a short distance west of Orio.

The Spanish insurgents thus hoped to drive a wedge which would rout the entire northern goverment army, estimated to include 40,000 fighting men.

Bilbao tonight was nervous concerning its own fate. Still in government hands, it sheltered some 40,000 refugees from Guipuzcoa Province.

Refugees from the insurgent-conquered cities of Irun and San Sebastian were lodged in private houses, while thousands were fed free at canteens in hotels.

Bilbao's prisons already contain 2,300 hostages.

Two government submarines lay in Bilbao Harbor, ready to attack any insurgent vessels which might attempt to bombard Bilbao.

Knox Suggests Slogan For Democratic Drive

San Francisco, Sept. 18 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, tonight proposed a slogan for the Democratic campaign.

"Just 20 years ago," Knox said in an address for delivery before a party rally here, "a President was elected in this country by a slogan. It was 'He kept us out of war.'

"We have not had any slogans in this campaign. I suggest one for the Democrats: 'He kept us in depression.'"

44 Die, 18 Lost As Hurricane Strikes Jersey

Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey.

Meager reports from isolated sections, however, indicated the damage and loss of life probably would be less than in the disaster of 1933.

The North Carolina, Virginia and Maryland coastal areas missed the "dangerous semi-circle" of the tropical hurricane because its center stayed off shore, Gordon E. Dunn, of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Weather Bureau said last night.

The right-hand quadrant of the advancing hurricane, he explained, is known as the "dangerous semi-circle," and this stayed out at sea as the circular storm ripped along just off the coast. The right quadrant, he added, piles up great waves of water before it.

Baltimorean Drowned.

His body was recovered by Coast Guardsmen. William Leiner, 32, was rescued after swimming two miles. He said Zorn bought the boat at New Rochelle, N. Y., and hired him to pilot it to Baltimore.

The rescued trio from the ill-fated steamer Long Island told a harrowing story of man's battle against the sea. They were Delmar George, son of the ship's captain; Richard McQuillen and his brother, John, both of Wilmington, N. C.

They told of their losing fight in the teeth of a 70-mile-an-hour wind, which sent the seas crashing over their boat until the pilot house was swept away like matchwood. They recounted a final shifting of the cargo at the last fateful moment, which sent their ship to the bottom.

First warning of the disaster that lay ahead came as the vessel, bound from Long Island to Cape May with a cargo of fish, was struck by a huge wave. As green water poured over their bunks, the men in the forecastle were swept to the decks.

Crew Labored at Pumps.

For more than an hour the crew labored feverishly at the pumps to clear the holds of water. But the green tide came on and on, and the steam pressure began to give out. Suddenly the cargo of fish shifted. The vessel turned over on its side and began to settle.

One by one their shipmates sank from view, McQuillen recalled. He and his brother clung to a hatch. In sight of land they risked everything and swam ashore, where they collapsed.

Coast Guardsmen expressed amazement that the Long Island was out at all yesterday. They cited the ample storm warnings heralding the storm's approach.

Storm Buffets Ocean City.

Striking the Norfolk area a glancing blow, the hurricane howled up the Virginia-Maryland Eastern Shore, and late yesterday its center appeared to be hammering Ocean City, Md.

A 70-mile wind kicked up a tide that inundated Ocean City's main street under four feet of water and smashed the resort's telephone and telegraph lines.

Tom Robbins, clam digger, was feared drowned. L. T. Somers and Jack Callahan, who set out in a fishing boat Thursday, had not returned. Mr. and Mrs. William Kelly and their child also were missing.

From Crisfield came word that Marvin Purnell and a fishing party had not been heard from since Thursday night.

$500,000 Damage Reported.

North of Ocean City, at Cape May, N. J., damage estimated as high a $500,000 was reported.

In parts of Chesapeake Bay, the hurricane lashed the waters oceanward, and the result was a tide far below normal. Oysters were left high and dry, and oystermen abandoned their boats to pick them up.

Veteran boatmen in the Annapolis area said the tide was the lowest they had ever seen. Wharves stood high above the water level, and the ferry steamer, Albert C. Ritchie, rested on the bottom at the foot of King George street.

The Weather Bureau, which had been watching the hurricane since its birth in the Caribbean, gave ample warning when it headed toward the North Carolina coast Thursday morning.

From all along the Carolina coast came reports of how the inhabitants, amply warned by the Coast Guard, prepared for the hurricane.

Inhabitants of Cape Hatteras also had "holed up" by the time the hurricane struck there.

Nn word had been received from Nags Head, Kitty Hawk and Monteo on Roanoke Island, but all had been warned in plenty of time, and no great loss of life was feared.

Crisfield, Md., one of the world's greatest seafood ports, was without electricity and telegraph communications yesterday, and damage to wharves, boats and other property was heavy. Fishermen did not dare venture to the oyster grounds.

The city of Norfolk, which was prepared for a full onslaught from the hurricane, was struck by only a fringe of it. There was no loss of life.

The streets were littered with debris, and were awash with water, but City Manager Thompson estimated the damage would not exceed $20,000. J. J. Murphy, weather forecaster, predicted today would be fair.

curement division about 9 a. m. An Emergency Hospital ambulance physician, who responded to the first alarm, said the woman had been dead only a few hours. Her body was still warm.

The slain woman had been separated from her husband for several years. He is now believed to be on the West Coast. They had no children. She came here from Detroit, Mich., about 18 years ago, and first went to work at the War Department. Since then, she has worked at the Navy Department, Veterans' Administration, Commerce and Agricultural Departments. She once lived in Lansing, Mich., where she attended a business school.

Mrs. Goodwin, an attractive brunette, was known to have large sums of money in the house. She collected large rents and had furnished the place in elaborate taste. During her time in Washington, she attended the Washington School for Secretaries, Lewis Hotel Training School and a public high school, where she took a business course. Her father, Frank F. Daugherty, lives in California.

Investigators assigned to the case include Lieut. John Fowler, police crime expert; Detective Sergt. George Darnell, chief of the homicide squad, and Detective Sergts. Aubrey Tolson, Jerry Flaherty and Joseph Shimon.

Senator Norris Asks President Be Re-elected

Nebraskan Says Roosevelt Re-election Is Necessary to Avoid Dictatorship.

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., Sept. 18.—Senator George W. Norris tonight asserted "the re-election of President Roosevelt is an absolute necessity if we are to save our country from the dangers of bolshevism and from ultimate dictatorship."

The veteran Independent Republican returned from a vacation to open a campaign for election to a fifth term in the Senate as an Independent, but he did not mention his own candidacy in a radio address other than to say, "I would be glad, indeed, if I could pass out of public life."

Norris denounced "the enemies of President Roosevelt" and added:

"They are trying to save their dividends, the profits they have made and continuing to make through the economic power they wield. They are merely throwing dust in the eyes of the people."

Criticizes Landon.

"With two exceptions," he said, "Mr. Landon thus far in his campaign has confined his criticism to meaningless generalties. He has lacked either the candor or the courage to take up these measures, which make up the New Deal, and tell the people wherein they are wrong and what he would put in place of them if he is elected."

"For instance, he has said he did no object to relief, but he wanted to pay for it 'out of the hides of politicians.' I doubt whether Mr. Landon was serious in this statement. If he takes the tax out of the 'hides of politicians' some of his followers would be skinned indeed."

He asked Gov. Landon to "tell the country" his stand on the holding company act, the higher income tax and inheritance tax acts, the farm credit administration, the public works administration, the rural electrification administration and other New Deal acts. Norris termed them "accomplishments."

His address was broadcast.

Florida Absentees' Deadline Is Oct. 10

Florida absentee voters must register by October 10, it was announced yesterday by Dan P. Mularkey, president of the Florida Democratic Club of Washington.

Floridians who registered for the recent primary in their State will not have to re-register, he said.

Inquiries in regard to registration, balloting, poll taxes, etc., will be answered at the Absentee Voters' Bureau, 1410 G street northwest.

For his service, McAlexander was awarded a Distinguished Service Cross and other military honors.

Born on a farm near Dundas, Minn., August 30, 1864, Gen. McAlexander was educated in Minnesota. He was graduated from the United States Military Academy, at West Point, in 1887 and then served in several military posts in various parts of the country.

Sailed for France.

In 1916, when conditions threatened to involve the United States in the World War, McAlexander was detailed as inspector and instructor for the Oregon National Guard.

As soon as this country entered the war, he was designated for overseas service and sailed for France in June, 1917.

In addition to the Marne battle, Gen. McAlexander served in many other engagements during the World War.

He served with distinction in the Spanish - American War, went through the Santiago campaign and was recommended for promotion for "gallantry under fire." Later, he served in the Philippines from 1900 until 1907.

In addition to the Distinguished Service Cross, he was made an officer of the Legion of Honor of France and received the Croix de Guerre twice, with palm. Italy honored him with the Croce di Guerre.

Upon his retirement from the Army, Gen. McAlexander returned to Oregon and built a home at Newport on the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

Army Aid Found Dead; Investigation Ordered

Fort Reno, Okla., Sept. 18 (AP).—Maj. E. M. Daniels, commanding officer at Fort Reno, said today Maj. Everett Conant, was found dead in his office.

Maj. Daniels declared an Army board of inquiry will be called to determine the cause of Maj. Conant's death.

The circumstances surrounding the death could be given out only after the board of inquiry had considered the case, Daniels asserted.

Colorado Springs, Colo., Sept. 18 (AP).—The International Typographical Union voted today to support the committee on industrial organization in its split with the American Federation of Labor.

The exact vote was not announced, but leaders said it would run about 20 to 1. The I. T. U., by its action, supported its president, Charles P. Howard, who is secretary of the C. I. O.

masters refusing to risk the open sea. All east and southbound air line traffic was cancelled.

Trees fell on Long Island, and numerous fishing boats were torn from their moorings. Ten persons were rescued from drifting boats in the Rockaway and Long Beach areas.

A patrol boat was sent out to search for two unoccupied boats drifting in Great South Bay. A derrick scow, with seven men aboard, tore loose from a tug in Long Island Sound and piled up on a reef. Coast Guards went to the rescue. Ferry service between the north shore and Connecticut points was disrupted.

Tonight the Coast Guard station at Fire Island, south of Long Island and separated from it by Great South Bay, reported all ferries were tied up and the year-around population was preparing to stick it out. Nearly all summer visitors had left.

The wind, Coast Guardsmen reported, had reached a velocity of 75 miles an hour, and they said they expected it to go much higher in probably the worst storm in 20 years.

At one narrow beach section, water was reported sweeping entirely across the mile distance. Waves were breaking at an estimated height of 35 feet. Some store windows in Babylon and Bayshore, towns on Long Island proper, were smashed.

Alfonso May Return If Rebels Are Victors

Milan, Sept. 18 (U.P.).—Former King Alfonso of Spain bought maps of northern Spanish roads today, indicating he contemplated returning to his native country if the rebels win the civil war.

Alfonso told members of the Civil Engineers Club he needed the maps of study his itinerary, but quickly added he was undecided when he would leave.

France Seeks End Of Strike Spread

Paris, Sept. 18 (AP).—Worried government officials labored tonight to dam the spreading wave of strikes as workers marched out of the Lille textile mills to join a victory parade.

Conciliators, concerned that the tendency of workers to quit their jobs and occupy the factories to demonstrate their grievances might become an accepted procedure, spread hurriedly to the strike areas. They hoped to win concessions from employers and workers in the same manner as Premier Leon Blum, as peacemaker, ended the Lille strike.

Labor leaders also indicated their uneasiness at the rising tide of "sit-down" strikes by considering other means "for protecting workers' rights."

The executive committee of the General Confederation of Labor called a meeting for September 25 "to survey the situation and study proper measures to safeguard the rights of workers in respect to collective contracts and to assure the economic recovery of the nation."

Officials Map Plan for Firms In Chest Drives

Quota for Factory Owners Considered by Heads of 1936 Campaign.

Determined to work out an equitable yardstick method of determining corporate ability to contribute to the coming Community Chest campaigns throughout the Nation, the 300 delegates to the 1936 Mobilization for Human Needs concluded their sessions yesterday with a four-man symposium representing industrial views of the problem.

The four were R. V. Fletcher, general counsel for the Association of American Railways; Albert H. Morrell, of the Kroger Chain Stores; Wendell C. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation, and Donaldson Brown, chairman of the finance committee of General Motors Corporation.

Brown presented to the conference a plan outlined for General Motors, under which that corporation determines the size of its contribution to Community Chests on the basis of the taxes it pays in each community. Brown's proposal, a variation of the plan used by General Electric Co. for some years, was suggested as applicable, with variations, to industry generally.

Outlines Plan.

Brown outlined his plan in detail, as follows:

"The total quota for all factory employers in the community shall bear the same proportion to the total Community Chest budget as the total taxes payable by these factories bear to the total taxes payable by the entire community.

"It should follow that the distribution of the preliminary quota among the various employers should be in proportion to their average number of employes."

Two Sections.

Brown divided the corporate obligation into two sections, those activities which are directly for the relief of human suffering, misery and destitution, and those which are concerned primarily with recreation and character-building. He suggested that the former group of activities was a preferable object of corporate giving to the character-building services, saying that the latter "do not offer a basic necessary service to those actually in need."

Brown argued that the relief burden should be shifted to private shoulders. He said:

"As public administration is imposed to displace the agencies of private philanthropy there is the inevitable introduction of political considerations, with the tendency toward waste, extravagance and misapplied effort.

"This is the most potent argument against Federal administration of relief activities and also the most potent argument in favor of private relief in contrast to public relief * * * The greater the degree of private interest and private administration of these activities, the more efficient and economical will be the results.

"Serious Threat."

"One of the most serious threats to our social structure arises from conditions which have forced Government to assume responsibility for the welfare of its citizens, with the danger that such a course must inevitably produce political pressure for constantly more relief and constantly less work."

Brown told reporters he did not expect immediate adoption of his proposal, but that it was advanced as a basis for discussion.

Morrell, representing the chain-stores group, said that while such a proposal was out of the question for chain stores, he thought that the systems as a whole would welcome some standard for contribution. Pending such decision, he said he hoped that the stores would continue to increase their contributions "as they have inthe past six years."

"Came to Scoff."

Correll began by saying:

"It is a peculiar feeling to appear as a chain-store executive in Washington in respectable company. With these Senate investigations going on, you'd think we'd just come out of the penitentiary."

Wendell Willkie, speaking for the utility group, said:

"I don't like that damned word 'yardstick' a bit, but, although I came to this meeting to scoff, I remain to pray." He said utility executives would meet before the Chest campaign begins after election day, November 3, and discuss a standard for contributions.

His reference to the word 'yardstick' came from its repeated use by Government spokesmen in arguing over the Administration's power projects in the Tennessee Valley, an area in which the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation has penetrated to some extent.

Fletcher, speaking for the railroads, said that he was "tremendously interested," and suggested the appointment of a committee to discuss the proposal before the railway association's executive committee next month.

Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Co. and chairman of the 1936 mobilization, outlined all the variations of the original formula at the luncheon session yesterday afternoon which closed the conference, after a breakfast and two sectional meetings had disclosed moot points.

Stillman F. Westbrook, of Hartford, Conn., a vice president of the Aetna Life Insurance Co., was re-elected president of the Community Chests and Councils, Inc. Newton D. Baker, of Cleveland, was re-elected honorary president. Geofrey Smith, of Philadelphia, was elected vice president, and John S. Bryan, Cleveland, and George Vincent, Greenwich, Conn., were re-elected vice presidents.

The board membership was changed from 100 members to 30 members, to consist of 10 professional workers and 20 lay workers. The following are the new members:

Walter Edwards, Providence, R. I.; Marion B. Fulsom, Rochester, N. Y.; James B. Forgan, jr., Chicago; Alston Burr, Boston; Julius Goldman, New Orleans; Alec D. Hardie, Toronto; Louis Horne, Lincoln, Nebr.; Daniel Koshland, San Francisco; Gilbert McClintock, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Ralph J. Reed, Portland, Oreg.; Tom K. Smith, St. Louis; Dr. Douglas Vanderhoff, Richmond, Va.; Oscar Wells, Birmingham, Ala., and W. P. Witherow, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Science-Led Co-operative Society of Future

Dorothy Thompson Says Leaders Must Offer Vitalized Ideal to Offset Misdirected Inspiration of Dictators.

Among the speakers at the dinner opening the 1936 Mobilization for Human Needs Conference was Miss Dorothy Thompson, author, columnist, foreign correspondent, and known to some as "the wife of Sinclair Lewis." Her address was so well received, and aroused so much favorable comment, that The Post is reproducing it today in its entirety. The speaker earned a high place among newspaperfolk in her own right by her foreign correspondence, and she spoke Thursday night fortified by that rich and solid background of experience.

DOROTHY THOMPSON.

The revolutions of the last decade, which have changed and are changing the fact of Europe and setting up new faiths, new myths, and new forms of organization, which for better or worse will influence the course of history for a long time to come—these revolutions—are revolutions of youth.

They are the revolutions of a generation. Although they have been led by men who grew to manhood before the war, their very leaders are relatively young, are men whom the war struck while they were still of impressionable age.

And the followers of these men are youths who were children or unborn in 1914. This is the outstanding fact about the movements, and it is to this fact that we ought to direct our attention.

I do not believe that these revolutions were isolated phenomena. I do not think that they can be explained away by saying that Italy is an overpopulated country and that some extreme form of nationalization was necessary to win for Italy a place in the sun; or that Germany is a nation naturally fond of regimentation, and that the nationalist revolution there is the result of the lost war; or that these revolutions are the work of single individuals, evil, or men of genius, according to the standards by which they are judged.

Process Going On.

The time has passed when we could make any such superficial judgments. In country after country a process has been going on before our eyes, as in a laboratory. The process is almost identical everywhere. It has run its course and reached its apotheosis in Russia and in Germany and in Italy. It is at the height of conflict in Spain. It is going on in France.

These are the most dissimilar possible nations. Russia is a nation emerging into modernity; Italy is a nation with one of the most highly individualistic peoples in the world. Spain is a country largely illiterate, and still steeped in feudalism. Germany is a highly organized, widely cultured and modern industrial state. France is the birthplace on the continent of the idea of liberty and equality, and is that continental nation which won the war. We are forced, therefore, to admit that there are sources of discontent, sources of revolution, which are apparently universal in the western world.

I do not think that it will take me very widely afield of my subject, if I try to trace what seem to be the sources of that discontent, and what seem to be the processes which are at work.

In every country in the world, you are confronted by the fact that a highly productive apparatus, an apparatus which as far as actual production is concerned is unbelievably efficient, periodically stalls, breaks down, and results in the most appalling economic disorder. This economic disorder reveals glaringly, that a collectivism exists of which we are all a part, whether we admit it or not. For when the apparatus stalls, all of us are affected. And men wake up to the fact that their individual freedom is a myth.

Cites Farmer's Plight.

The farmer on his own acreage discovers that he will lose his tools, his machines, because he cannot pay the installment on them, or buy for them gas and oil. Or he finds that his acreage is not really his own at all, but that the ownership resides with the holder of a mortgage, which suddenly, in terms of his products is an unbearable load.

The industrial worker or the white collar workers finds that the factory doors are shut or his office is laying off its staff, and that his rainy day reserves, which he has been persuaded to invest in the functioning apparatus are gone, too.

Everyone finds that he has been leading a profoundly communalized life, and that as an individual he can do nothing whatever about it. In fact he discovers, in his own life, in the most fundamental sense of the word, the sense of whether or not he eats, that he is a part of a highly integrated wholeness, and that the wholeness is not working.

The result of that overwhelming awakening manifests itself in many ways according to the individual. The man of thought, the man of science, affirms a fact. He says: Something is wrong with this system. Many things are right with it.

Let us reconsider, restudy, the whole apparatus, and find out where the screw is loose, and what adjustments must be made. And let us proceed to make those adjustments, regardless of what particular private interests may be temporarily discomfited. Let us attempt to establish new principles where new principles are quite evidently needed.

There are, thank heavens, men of this kind in the world, whose policies are guided by principle; who believe that the thing that must be, is the thing that is true that coincides with realities. But such men are not numerous, and often they are not men of action. And society seldom listens to them until it is in the most terrific jam, and sometimes it is then too late.

Average Man's Reaction.

For this is not the reaction of the weak man, or even of the average man. His reaction is immediately to blame the people who pull the strings. If the factory door is closed the villain is the man who closed it. Obviously, since he himself is not in control, someone must be, and that somebody is the devil.

One must therefore kill the devils, and everything will be all right. He conceives that the disorder in society is due to a plot. It is very difficult to tell him that perhaps what is wrong with society is that man's inventive genius has far outstripped his capacity for social organization, and that the scientific mind is functioning everywhere except on the matter of the nature and organization of man.

The men who approach reorganization in terms of a revolution of principles are the true radicals. Which is the same as saying that they are the true conservatives. For they judge a program by attempting to get to the roots, to underlying principles. And in doing that, they are no more willing to reject 2,000 years of history and experience than they are willing to deny a modern and a new fact because it has not happened before.

They are bent upon seeking an integration between what has been and what must be. And I say now, that whether we save civilzation in the next hundred years depends upon the race between the men of principle and the men of catchwords. In Europe the men of principle are losing that race. That is the overwhelming fact of the times in which we live.

In Europe the devil-chasers are in the saddle. In Russia the devil is the bourgeoise, in Germany the devil is the Jews, in Spain the devil is either the church and the aristocracy or the whole working class. In France the devil is Russia or the devil is Germany. And we are beginning to get an uncomfortable number of devil-chasers in our own country. For some citizens of Long Island, especially idle women, the devil is Mr. Roosevelt. And for some gentlemen of Fourteenth street, the devil is the Economic Royalists, that is to say, rich Republicans. But we must tell our youth: There is no personal devil. There is only apathy, and ignorance, and complacency.

"Devil-Chasers" of Europe.

The youth of Europe followed the devil-chasers because the devil-chasers promised them action. Do not think that they played upon their baser emotions. On the contrary they appealed to their highest ideals. And do not make the mistake that the devil-chasers themselves were insincere men. On the contrary, they believe in their devils even more strongly than do their followers. (Only there is one thing to remember when you start devil chasing. And that is that if you go at it hard and sincerely enough, the devil tends to become your own alter ego. You tend to take on his features.

(I do not know how otherwise to explain that Russian communism in so many important ways so closely resembles Russian Tsarism, or that Mr. Hitler's ideas of racial nationalism and the chosen people should so closely follow those expressed by the ancient Jews. The book of Ezra has got most of the Hitler race program including the grandmother clause).

But these movements, which have overturned democratic orders and are, for better or worse, setting new patterns of social organization for a long time to come, have come into existence to meet a demand. They have come in answer to a yearning. They are one form of answer to a universal desire.

Fascism, Nazism and Communism have not attracted the best youth of some highly civilized nations purely because of the negative aspects of their philosophies. And therefore we must ask ourselves what on the constructive side, is the key to their success.

They have swept nations because they accept and affirm the conception of the integrated community. They set their faces against the individualism of the past. They insist that man exists in every feature of his life, whether economic or social, as an inalienable part of a whole. They affirm that the welfare of the whole is superior to the welfare of the unit. And in asserting that they merely confirm what is already the overwhelming experience of the masses of modern man.

Leaders Offer Goal.

In the second place, they affirm the ideas of unity, order, and direction. They invisage a goal. They direct a people toward a purpose.

These ideas have enormous vitality in the world today, in all democratic countries. Germany, before the Nazis came into power, Italy, before Mussolini took the helm, had reached a state of such internal division that it amounted to anarchy.

I am not speaking of the economic organization alone. The production apparatus of Germany functioned admirably. But the distribution apparatus did not. Unemployment was rife, and the youth emerging from the high schools and universities came out into a world where they were not wanted, where the only thing open to them was to rot on the dole. It seemed that the world could get on perfectly well without them. They belonged nowhere.

Democracy had degenerated into a continual warfare between pressure groups; agreement took the form of compromises, bargains, and treaties between those groups. And nowhere was a clear purpose, or a clear goal envisaged.

There was a time in this world when men believed the words of the catechism:

Little Child, why were you born?

And the answer: To serve God and keep his commandments.

But that unity established by a common creed was gone. So was the unity established by a common governmental symbol, which is always a powerful force in integrating national life. Royalty had capitulated in fact or had been overthrown in men's minds by human reason.

I do not want to use mystic words, but it was true, it was a fact, that the youth of these countries did not know why it lived. It was, in the most profound sense of the word, unemployed. Not only were its hands unemployed, but its hearts, its ideals, its spiritual energies were unemployed. This was not true of the most superior, or the most creative.

Existence Not Life.

There are always men who can summon out of themselves reserves, dreams, directions. But it is not true of the masses of men, not now, and not ever. The individual can exist without an aim, but he cannot live. For life means growth, expansion, direction, purpose. And society was at cross-purposes.

Young men killed themselves not because they were hungry, but because there was no reason to live. Or they wasted their lives in a restless search for pleasure, for immediate sensation. And inside everyone's heart was a feeling of frustration.

Does that picture seem very strange to you? Have you ever seen anything like it nearer at home? When such a state of feeling exists someone only needs to arise and cry: Men Wanted! to get a following. It doesn't even matter much what he wants them for.

We know what the results of this fascism movement has been. The conception of the whole has swallowed the conception of the parts. Instead of integration we have regimentation. Instead of unity, we have uniformity. Instead of societies, we have armies.

The idea of an army, is after all the simplest form of collectivism and unity. It is the most primitive manifestation of order and direction. Just as war and conquest are the most tangible of all possible purposes.

These vast armies of young men who are both regimented and exalted menace Western civilization. For these are not civilized conceptions of unity or civilized goals. But they are proof that men would rather have unity and order in the service of death than anarchy and atomization for no end which can be envisioned.

Refers to Nuremberg.

And one cannot look across the ocean and see at Nuremberg 50,000 youths, uniformed, armed, organized, inspired, on the march somewhere, no one knows quite where without knowing that unless these conceptions of unity, order, and direction are challenged by better ones, these concepts will win.

That is what Prof. Gilson, of the University of Paris, meant when he said last week at Harvard, "The future of civilization rests upon what the United States will do in the next hundred years."

There is a better order, a better unity, a better direction. It is implicit in the ideas which governed the foundation of this country, and from which we have lamentably departed. For this country was founded by philosophers, by men who sought valid and universal principles. They believed in the possibility of founding a community of free men. That freedom was to rest in a minimum of universal security.

Jefferson, in an agricultural age, saw a nation of small landowners, of neighbors. Whitman, years later, envisaged "A city invincible to the attacks of the whole of the earth. The new city of friends." The methods of Jefferson are no longer applicable in a world of machines. The dream is as valid as 150 years ago.

That idea of community is not the idea of communism. Jefferson never saw society as an ant hill with every ant equal to every other ant. But he realized that democracy will never function in the long run, except on the basis of a universal minimum of security and a maximum of agreement.

There is a better conception of society than that of the ant hill or that of the regiment. It is the picture of society as an orchestra. It has leadership, it has unity, it has a purpose, but it also has piccolo players and a first violinist. It is a collective, whose power and beauty depend upon manifold activities; upon the highest possible development of very unequal individuals. And each individual is not demeaned by his participation in the collective, but vastly augmented and expanded by it. He is not regimented. He is co-operative. For he knows that the music of the world is not written for French horns, or for whole orchestras of French horns; it is not even written for solo violins. It is written for many instruments, for many voices.

Sees Increase Needed.

If one conceives of society in this way, the phrases private enterprise vs. public enterprise; working classes vs. management and which is now the symbol of corporate ownership; government vs. business, cease to have much meaning. The questions cease to be moral; the ybecome technical. We shall ask ourselves: Not who has the RIGHT to do this, but who does it best? We shall take realistic criteria as our measuring rods. We shall more and more impress science into the management of our society. Science illumined has purpose.

And as for devils—we shall find them and fight them, in our hearts.

Do you think that all this is a dream? I do not think it is a dream. I believe that for such a society there is already a yearning, and already a will. I believe that in our universities men of knowledge and good will are seeking techniques and principles which may produce better programs than any we yet have.

I know that all over the country industrialists are working alone and in groups at a revaluation of the principles upon which they have been operating. I know that in the ranks of labor are men who do not see the world as an irreconcilable struggle between hostile classes.

And for such a society, you who sit here have been preparing the way. Earlier than anyone else, you sensed that out of this no man, no child, must be allowed to fall.

What are you keeping them for? For unemployment lines? For armies? Why your infinite patience with the weak, the unlucky, the incompetent, the unfortunate? Is it only pity that moves you? Only some vague bad conscience?

Or do you sense that you are holding the fort for tomorrow?

Small Nations Back Ethiopia's League Rights

Big Powers Seek to Dodge Issue, Arguing Selassie Regime Inoperative.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, Sept. 19.—Small powers of the League of Nations, informed sources said tonight, will resist any plan to induce Italian participation in the forthcoming assembly if that plan embrances barring representatives of Haile Selassie.

At the first meeting of the League Council today, preliminary to convocation of the League Assembly Monday, statesmen anxious to bring Italy back into Locarno pact collaboration listened uneasily to rumbles of revolt from smaller nations.

The lesser powers indicated at the closed Council session, it was learned, that they were unalterably opposed to any diplomatic formula directed at the unseating of the Ehiopian Negus' representatives.

There were unofficial reports the larger powers tentatively had advanced a plan to bar the Ethiopians on the ground they do not represent an effective government.

By this move, it was reported, the powers hoped to persuade Italian delegates to attend and at the same time avoid official repudiation of Ethiopia as a League member.

The smaller powers, however, were represented as feeling such a procedure would be tantamount to League recognition of Italian annexation of Ethiopia, still officially a member of the League of Nations.

Italian delegates did not attend today's meeting.

The council adjourned after agreeing to pass on to the assembly replies to invitations for League reform.

The Spanish civil war made itself felt in the League circles when Julio Alverez del Vayo, representative of the Midrid government, complained to Yvan Debos, French Foreign Minister, that Portugal was aiding the Spanish insurgents.

Portugal, he said, was doing this by refusing to participate in the non-intervention commitee.

Seattle Paper's Aids, News Guild to Meet

Seattle, Sept. 18 (AP).—The National Relations Board hearing of the 37-day-old Post-Intelligencer newsroom strike was postponed again today at the request of the newspaper and Seattle American Newspaper Guild officials.

Trial Examiner Edwin S. Smith said representatives from both sides in the controversy requested the recess in order to meet together with attorneys.

It was the first time guild members and Hearst newspaper officials had met since the guild called the strige August 13.

School Budget Hearing Postponed to Tuesday

The District Commissioners yesterday postponed until Tuesday an executive hearing on the 1938 estimates of the Board of Education because of other engagements.

The schools will constitute the last department to be considered by the Commissioners before submitting a dual budget to the Budget Bureau.

First Lady Better; Must Remain Abed

By the Associated Press.

Two or three more days in bed for Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, ill with cold and fever, were prescribed yesterday by Dr. Ross McIntyre, White House physician. He reported his patient better, however.

Her usually active program interrupted, Mrs. Roosevelt had to be content with dictating a few matters to her secretary.

If two more days of treatment should prove sufficient for her to take up her schedule where she left off, she and the President will go Monday to Hyde Park, N. Y., for the eighty-third birthday anniversary celebration of Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother. The President's wife also is scheduled to make a speech next week at the annual New York Herald Tribune conference on current problems.

Gas Dangerous to Man, Useless in War, Found

Cleveland, Sept. 18 (AP).—Discovery of a new gas, dangerous to man yet without use it war, was announced today by Western Reserve University from its laboratory at the Great Lakes Exposition.

The gas, carefully held in a 300-foot glass prison, is thionyl chlorofluoride. The experiments leading to its discovery by Dr. Harold S. Booth, of the university's chemistry department, were open to the public, necessitating elaborate safeguards to prevent danger to spectators.

Austrian Count Loses U. S. Plea for Alimony

Los Angeles, Sept. 18 (AP).—Count Rudolf von Stefenelli, 67, commercial artist and descendant of an Austrian noble family, lost his plea in court today for temporary alimony of $400 a month from Mrs. Constance Stefenelli, pending trial of her divorce suit.

Superior Judge Caryl M. Sheldon ordered, however, that Mrs. Stefenelli pay $100 court costs and $400 fees on account to her husband's lawyers.

The Count said his wife ordered him out of their Santa Monica home shortly before she sued for divorce, and that he now has only "four or five dollars."

Mrs. Stefenelli said she had supported her husband for the last five years.

Nippon Troops Act in Chinese Attack Incident

By the Associated Press.

Peiping, China, Sept. 18.—Japanese troops, backed by truckaful of reinforcements, tonight surrounded Chinese barracks at Fengtai after reports of an incident threatening the peace of North China.

The Domei (Japanese) News Agency reported Chinese soldiers at Fengtai, a strategic railway center, had attacked a Japanese officer and orderly as the latter returned with his troops from maneuvers.

Japanese forces, the report said, took up combat positions, but an open clash apparently was averted. Sun Cheh-Yuan, chairman of the Tupei-Chahar political council, ordered that every effort be made to settle the incident.

Japanese officers said the "Chinese admitted they were in the wrong," and were reported demanding Chinese troops be withdrawn from Fengtai barracks as a peaceful solution.

The day, fifth anniversary of the Japanese occupation of Mukden, capital of Manchuria, was observed throughout China as one of "mourning." Flags were lowered to half staff and places of amusement were shut.

Because of the tension between China and Japan, public demonstrations were banned and augmented police guards were posted. In Shanghai police battled with 1,000 students demonstrating against Japan. Patriotic societies scattered anti-Japanese handbills.

(The Mukden occupation, which led to the creation of Manchukuo as a Japanese puppet state, was "celebrated" in Soviet Russia, where the newspapers devoted lengthy articles to Manchukuo.

(They charged Japan had set up a vast military base in Manchuria, had honeycombed it with military roads and railways, and was concentrating men, munitions and airplanes for an attack on the Soviet's far eastern borders. The newspaper Izvestia asserted the U. S. S. R. maintained its strength in the Far East and was prepared to match force with Japan if it invaded Soviet soil.)

Mother, 30, Pleads Guilty in Train Plot

Coshocton, Ohio, Sept. 18 (AP).—A mother who held her 4-month-old baby in her arms stood before the bar in Common Pleas Court late today and pleaded guilty to two attempts to wreck Pennsylvania passenger trains by tampering with track bolts.

"I plead guilty; I want to get this thing over with," cried the woman, Mrs. Edith Buckmaster West, 30, when Judge J. C. Daugherty arraigned her and three men companions.

The men, Albert Buckmaster, brother of Mrs. West, and Wayne and Norman Hartley, all in their twenties, pleaded innocent. They were returned to jail in lieu of $1,000 bonds to await trial.

Mrs. West's sentence was deferred pending outcome of the charges against her companions.

Prosecutor Russell Lyons said Mrs. West told him she entered into the conspiracy in the hope of obtaining money, in robbing the train passengers, for a divorce from her estranged husband so she could marry Wayne Hartley.

Lyons said the plot was thwarted when a farmer noticed that the track bolts were missing.

Island Off Carolina Flooded Second Time in Last 30 Years

The 9-foot tide that submerged Ocracoke Island, off North Carolina's coast, yesterday morning, was not the first to sweep over the low sandy strip, barely a few feet above sea level, says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic Society. Islanders still talk of the mighty wave that "creamed over" 30 years ago and left the place littered with debris.

Ocracoke Island, about 15 miles long and so narrow as to be more a string than a strip, is part of the thin rampart of sand holding the Atlantic Ocean off from Pamlico Sound, largest body of water in North Carolina. It is the northern part of the strip between Cape Hatteras and Cape Lookout.

Hatteras Inlet on the north of the island and Ocracoke Inlet on the south gives treacherous access from the Atlantic to Pamlico Sound. It is dangerous to venture through without a local pilot, because of strong currents and channels which shift too rapidly to be accurately marked.

The island is dotted with clumps of live oaks, gnarled and bowed by constant winds, and with a scattering of low frame houses. Near the southwestern end on Pamlico Sound, where a breakwater offers precarious shelter to fishing boats, a little village consists of fishermen's homes, their irregular garden plots, an unpretentious hotel, a fish house, and a few structures to house the businesses of repairing boats, storing equipment, and supplying the ever-necessary gasoline. A chalky white lighthouse dominates the scene.

The island was known to sixteenth century navigators, who called it Wokokon. It is in the neighborhood of Raleigh's first attempt at colonization of the New World.

Buffalo, N. Y., was selected for the 1937 encampment.

W. D. Wynne, Akron, Ohio, was elected junior vice commander, a post considered a "stepping stone" to the office of commander.

Railway Strike In Three States Ordered Today

Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas Workers Called After Accord Fails.

By the Associated Press.

Greenville, Tex., Sept. 18.—A strike of 500 "big four" brotherhood employes of the Louisiana, Arkansas & Texas and the Louisiana & Arkansas railways today was ordered to start at 6:30 a. m. tomorrow unless averted by last-minute arbitration.

The strike order called out engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen and switchmen.

The Louisiana, Arkansas & Texas branch runs from McKinney, Tex., to New Orleans, La., and the Louisiana & Arkansas line from New Orleans to Hope, Ark.

Employes based their strike decision on the alleged failure of C. P. Couch, president of the lines, to meet representatives in conference to handle "several pending unsettled disputes."

Chief among them was a complaint the carrier failed to reinstate agreements in effect on the railways for engineers, firemen, hostlers, conductors, brakemen and yardmen prior to abrogation June 3, 1933, with recognized standard rates of pay, rules and working conditions applied.

President Roosevelt appointed an emergency board which met here in August, 1933, and reported in favor of the employes, who claimed Couch failed to comply with the recommendations and, in a letter to the President, "misrepresented facts."

Six other complaints involved alleged mistreatment of individual employes and the carrier's failure to comply with certain proviisons and rules.

The company advertised in newspapers of three States today for workers to fill vacancies in the event of a strike. Armed guards moved into the yards here to prevent disorder.

Damage Slight As Maryland Rides Out Blow

Residents Well Prepared as Wind Sweeps Bay, Potomac Shores.

Amply warned, Southern Maryland battened down the hatches yesterday and rode through the big blow with only negligible damage.

A high wind swept the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River shores, but residents, remembering the 1933 hurricane, were well prepared.

Taking Weather Bureau warnings seriously, ships came into harbors, some of them tardily, behind high winds which had their decks awash.

In several sections telephone wires were reported down and a few small docks and wharves were washed away, but the total damage was not great.

The wind direction was a vital factor in holding down the storm's effect, said J. C. Lore, Solomons Island fisherman.

Because the winds were from the northeast, Lore said, and the tide comes up from the south on the bay, the two forces operated to keep away high-water danger.

With the forces of wind and tide against each other, Lore said, the tide was kept much lower than it would have been if the tide swept in with a following wind, as happened in 1933.

In several communities below Leonardtown, telephone wires were down. In Leonardtown a tree was blown across phone and power lines leading to the courthouse and jail, cutting off service. In most cases phone company crews made rapid repairs.

Solomons Harbor was crowded with oyster boats, which ran for harbor ahead of the gale. Some of the boats suffered slight damage.

At the height of the blow in the harbor, many boats were tilted so that waves broke over their decks.

Floridian Reports Cure For Poultry Leukemia

Gainesville, Fla., Sept. 18 (AP).—Dr. M. W. Emmel, veterinarian with the Florida agricultural experiment station here, announced today he and his associates have produced an anti-serum which has cured 85 per cent of the uncomplicated cases of leukemia in poultry.

He said he had met with "most encouraging results" in his experiments to cure the blood disease among himans and hoped to be able in the near future to announce a treatment for humans.

Leukemia has been recognized by the medical world since 1850 but so far there has been no known cure. It is common among chickens and some animals, but not widely prevalent among humans.

Mining The Alcazar.

Atop the granite slopes of Toledo is, or rather was, the Alcazar. For yesterday morning those in command of the besieging governmental force finally gave the order to touch off some of the mines placed underneath the cellars of the gigantic castle-fortress. Now the Alcazar is little more than a mass of ruins, within which lie buried many of its 1,700 heroic defenders.

The government troops had long hesitated to commit this tragic act of vandalism. They had sought to starve out those imprisoned within the massive walls of what once had been the residence of El Cid. But although conditions within the fort steadily grew worse the rebels refused to surrender. Showing the same fanatical courage that both sides in the civil war have repeatedly displayed, they scorned all overtures.

Recently neutrals sought to persuade the rebels to permit the evacuation of the women and children imprisoned in the Alcazar. From the government these neutrals had secured a promise of safe conduct for such non-combatants. But again the rebels refused. For their wives and children as well as for themselves they would make no compromise with a regime which they will either overthrow, or perish in the effort.

So crumbles into ruins that imposing edifice which has seen, before and within its walls, the Romans and the Goths, the Moors and the Cid, the monarchs of Spain's golden age and the Bourbons of a latter day. It had survived them all. It had survived the elements and accidents of centuries. It has not survived the fratricidal strife now engulfing Spain, an orgy of hate and fury and destruction fiercer and more terrible than any in the history of even that blood-drenched land.

Possibly the loyalists would have stayed their hands were it not for the fact that Gen. Franco's legions are close to the gates of the glamorous city which Spaniards of old used to call "Toledo the rich." It was his recent victories which doomed his comrades in the Alcazar and the Alcazar itself.

The rebels, despite their Fascist tag, are at bottom traditionalists. They want to see restored the Spain that was. But the Spain that was, even in its architectural survivals, is going the way of the Alcazar. Whichever side wins, the country and its people will lose. As so frequently happens in revolutions, the disruptive forces released by civil turmoil will prove unconfinable in any anticipated pattern.

Politics And Prosecution.

Washington has little interest in the Geoghan case in New York, except as it illustrates the general deficiencies of our judicial system. From this viewpoint, however, Gov. Lehman's dismissal of charges against the district attorney, whom he had previously superseded in the notorious Drukman trial, becomes a formidable argument in favor of nonpolitical prosecutors.

District Attorney Geoghan was accused of "negligence and gross incompetence" in the conduct of his office, of failure to prosecute certain individuals on bribery charges, and of associating with law violators. None of the charges was proved to the Governor's satisfaction, although they represented the unanimous conclusion of 21 grand jurymen who investigated Mr. Geoghan's conduct of the Drukman murder case for nearly seven months. Gov. Lehman criticized Mr. Geoghan's unsavory friendships as "manifestly ill-advised" and conceded that the district attorney's judgment in handling the case may have been faulty, but insisted that such shortcomings are not sufficient to justify his removal.

At this distance it would be presumptuous to assume that Mr. Lehman was actuated by political motives. Apparently he has plenty of precedent to justify his decision. And his contention that a governor should act with extreme caution in removing local officials chosen by the people is well taken. But that will not keep the incident out of politics, for the exonerated official is a powerful leader in Kings County who is clearly in a position to influence Mr. Lehman's campaign for re-election.

This latter fact alone would disqualify Mr. Geoghan from serving as a prosecutor in any rational system of law enforcement. Where politics and the prosecution of criminals are intermingled, inefficiency and corruption are to be expected. Whether partisan prosecutors seek to make a record of convictions, by fair means or foul, or use their influence to protect racketeer friends, the results are equally deplorable.

It is unreasonable to expect the elimination of abuses by the removal of those few prosecutors who can be convicted of "gross incompetence" by their political allies. The system itself is at fault. The logical outcome of the Geoghan case would be a militant campaign to divorce district attorneys as well as judges from politics and give them a tenure of office that would remove the temptation for opportunistic administration of justice.

A United Front On Health.

In a city that has been called the Nation's "plague spot" a favorable attitude on the part of the municipal heads toward increased health appropriations is most welcome news. The urgent necessity of improving our community health service has been recognized by the public for some time. If the Commissioners decide to make a determined fight on this issue, they may be certain of united community support.

A very unfortunate impression that the District Medical Society is opposed to the clinics proposed by Dr. Ruhland arose from the public budget hearings. Throughout the fight to obtain a more adequate public health service the society has lent active support to the Health Department's program. It still adheres to that policy. The resolution presented at the budget hearing did emphasize a belief "that such funds can be most economically expended through the utilization of already established clinics." But it contained no word of opposition to the plan of developing public health stations at strategic points in each section of the city.

The idea that these clinics might be a first step toward socialized medicine is nonsense. Fortunately the society harbors no such hysterical fears. Most local physicians are conscious of the fact that the Health Department is unable to furnish adequate medical care to indigents, and they have no anxiety about public clinics encroaching upon their practice.

There is a question, however, as to whether the District can afford to invest $500,000 in two new health centers when funds are so much needed for increased personnel in the health service. It is well to remember that these proposed buildings are only one item in Dr. Ruhland's program. In addition he has asked for a new dental clinic, more doctors to look after health in the schools, more medical school examiners, more nurses, an additional physician in the tuberculosis service, a bacteriologist for the venereal disease clinic, a considerable number of sanitation inspectors and a director of health education. In round numbers this expansion of the service would cost $110,000.

Important as it is to secure modern health centers, the need for competent personnel seems to take precedence over the proposed building program. If the Commissioners can find a way to finance the entire plan, they will render the community exceptional service. If trimming is necessary, in this as in other departments, the public interest might best be served by postponing construction of one clinic.

It should be clearly recognized, however, that extraordinary expenditures for health will be necessary in the next few years in order to wipe out alarming effects of past neglect.

Berlin's Fabian Tactics.

In view of the dilatory tactics employed by Germany and Italy with regard to the proposed new and broader Locarno Pact, it is becoming doubtful whether any such treaty will be made. Beyond that, it is now problematical whether there will even be a meeting to consider the subject.

In replying in an unfavorable vein to the British invitation to begin discussions on October 17, Germany's excuse is that not enough time has been allowed for diplomatic preparations. Italy, presumably in deference to the wishes of the Reich, has taken a similar stand.

But actually there has been more than enough time since March 7, when Germany smashed the original Locarno Treaty by remilitarizing the Rhineland, to prepare the way for the suggested conference. Germany seeks postponement because the will, not the way, is lacking for the kind of treaty which France desires. Following the Nazi Congress at Nuremberg it is now abundantly clear to all that the Reich will insist upon a free hand in eastern Europe. And the French are not disposed to bind themselves to an agreement with Germany so narrow in scope that it would leave the latter free to attack either the Soviet Union or Czechoslovakia, both allies of France.

Nevertheless, the Germans are hopeful that their campaign to vitiate the Franco-Russian alliance will soon or late be successful. They trust that Herr von Ribbentrop, the new and popular German Ambassador to London, will in due course be able to persuade the British that the real interests of the latter lie in a purely west European pact. Such a treaty, Berlin has been arguing for some time, would not only insure the security of France and Belgium against German attack, in which end Great Britain is of course vitally interested, but would also make possible the easing of the race in air armaments which has so greatly worried the British people.

German diplomacy has not yet succeeded in winning the British government to its point of view. But, given time, success is not impossible, for no element in Great Britain seems strongly interested in defending eastern Europe against German expansion. That is why delay in the matter of the Locarno negotiations is of the very essence of German policy. It leaves the road open for aggression eastward without formal admission that Germany is opposed to any stabilizing pact in that area.

For The Night Is Coming.

Washington has a new magazine. Bearing the familiar insignia of WPA, Volume I, No. 1, of a "journal of progress," it is published by the District of Columbia Works Progress Administration, under the dignified title of "Work."

With a modesty somewhat unusual in WPA publicity, "Work" has made its debut with no advance garrulity. But its columns are not backward in telling how much the WPA has meant to the National Capital. Here is recalled the story of the dikes "which saved downtown Washington" during the flood last March. Here is told how "the protection of health in the District of Columbia has been immeasurably advanced through the operations of the Works Progress Administration and its predecessors." Here is recited the heroic efforts of the four WPA workers who are listing "magazine clipping dealings with the Latin-American countries which date back nearly twenty years." This last is a somewhat mystifying project, for the popular impression is that all the Latin-American countries date back nearly twenty years, and more.

Some interesting facts about the local WPA are found in an article by Maj. Donovan, the District auditor. Commissioner Allen, local WPA administrator, repeats his assertion that "there is a remarkable lack of politics in the work program." Another article tells how fast WPA women workers knit when Mrs. Roosevelt visits them. Harry Hopkins tells us that "a clear picture of what is being accomplished in the District of Columbia can be obtained through the medium of this magazine." There is no contribution from Queen Marie of Rumania. But then there are no advertisements either, or at least no advertisements except for the WPA.

WPA officials fully realize, Mr. Allen further observes, "that the relief funds constitute a sacred trust to be administered primarily for the benefit of the needy, but in keeping with the general interests of society." Of course none but a sour partisan would suggest that the production and free distribution of this new magazine is not in "the general interests of society." Indeed, "Work" seems calculated to take the place of "The Consumer," that other high-grade governmental publication which was dedicated to the interests of the forgotten man and is now in its turn forgotten.

Those who are honored by inclusion on the distribution list of "Work" should preserve their copies carefully. It is not merely that this priceless magazine gives information about the WPA which no amount of individual research could obtain. There is also the probability that its life will be short as well as merry. There is only time for one, or at most two, more issues before the electioneering work of "Work" will be superfluous.

Quite A Build-Up.

Who has seen the wind, asked Christina Rossetti, sagely concluding that none will answer affirmatively. Everyone hereabouts, however, is currently reading about its northward dash along the Atlantic coast. In the China Sea, they would have called this a typhoon. Midwesterners might name the storm a cyclone, but not a tornado since these blow with higher velocities. But most applicable is that word coined by the Caribs of long ago to describe the tempests which sweep almost regularly across their otherwise complacent islands—huracan.

It was probably one of the best promoted hurricanes that ever left home to make a killing in the big city. Probably, too, on return to the cave of Aeolus, it will be able to boast before its brothers, and with some justification, that it was greeted by one of the most elaborate receptions ever arranged for a wind. From the Carolinas to the St. Lawrence, special flags were hung out to apprise all the world of the stranger's arrival. Telegraphers and radio operators kept sleepless vigil to inform the populace of his every action along the way. Schools were closed, shipping scurried to harbor, even the season's last dawdling vacationers were stirred from their idling—all attention centered on the hurricane.

And, all things considered, the hurricane reciprocated with fair courtesy for such a powerful fellow. True, it took a few lives, and damaged a good deal of property. But considering what it might have done, or considering what man does when he really goes on the rampage—this was nothing. And it blew the war predictions and political furors into subordinate place for a single day, at least.

Where The Motorist Pays.

From the Kansas City Times.

According to the American Petroleum Institute, which is an interested party, the operation of a motorcar is about the most expensive luxury we enjoy. The institute figures from assessment rolls that the average value of the privately owned motorcar is $200 and that the tax paid last year by the average owner was $49.06, or 24½ per cent of the value of the car. And that was approximately $1 more than the average paid in 1934.

Cities and States take an average of $12.31 in license fees, then the States take an average of $23.53 in taxes on gasoline while the Federal Government is taking $6.57. Here and there, cities take another whack at the car owner for a gasoline tax. There is a Federal tax on lubricating oil which amounts to 65 cents of the total, and a Federal excise tax which reaches $1.86. Add to that the $1.34 tax on parts and the personal property levy of $2.80 and one has the total arrived at by the institute. Automobile owners in the United States pay in taxes $1,286,156,907 a year.

The Struggle In Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I disagree with the statement made in the article, "Britain Does Nothing," by David Wills, special correspondent of The Post, which appeared in The Post of September 15, that "the struggle (in Spain) is between the ruling and land-owning classes of the past and those who in the past were governed."

Whatever those differences were and are, the present struggle in Spain is primarily one between the Communists and the people who believe in freedom of worship. Mr. Wills makes the assertion that there are Catholics among the loyalists—I take issue with him on that point—if there are, they must be a fine type who would fight in defense of a government which permitted 500 Catholic churches to be burned before civil war in Spain was ever declared, a government whose own troops shot down in cold blood Spain's greatest Catholic statesman, Sotelo, who had done more for the advancement of Spain than any man of his day, a government which denied Sotelo's family and the people of Spain the right to give him an honorable burial, but which accorded every honor to the funeral of the Communist assassinated by an infuriated group for firing Catholic churches when the government neglected to take any action.

Mr. Wills is careful to mention Catholics among the loyalists while he says: "On the rebel side are monarchists, supporters of the Carlist pretender; Fascists, militarists and republicans." What became of the Catholics? He should have mentioned that all of the rebels are Catholics or persons who believe in religious freedom and government protection for all.

Mr. Wills says: "The miscellaneous ousted interests chose force to retain their vanishing privileges." I say a desperate Spanish people were goaded to the breaking point by a government unwilling or unable to protect their right to religious liberty.

There is more I could say about Mr. Wills' article with reference to Spain, but I doubt whether you could spare me more space.

Political Scoring.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The reaction of various political factions to the Maine election is a great boost to the institution of optimism. This rare trait was supposed to have been ditched (until the arrival of Roosevelt and Happy Days) along with the first crop of Farley predictions.

But each spokesman, cheery chatter in his larynx and a battle glint in his eye, has proclaimed the final score a complete vindication of his cause and candidate, a forecast of the flop in store for all heinous opposition at the fall meeting in November.

A more strenuous white-washing of the lily (the New Deal) is plainly in order through the medium of the propaganda and open purse divisions if bureaucracy and the institution of free squandering, wide-open borrowing and battered budgets are to survive in the Republic.

The pay-off is not on strikeouts, muffs, wild heaves, men left on the bases and sideline oratory, however acrid. It is on runs chased across the platter. WALTER BAHNSEN.

Senator Couzens' Worth.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is nothing short of a catastrophe that the political situation in Michigan has worked to such a disadvantage as to deprive that State and the United States of the truly valuable services of one of the most honest and rugged statesmen to grace the world's greatest deliberative body in a generation. I refer to Senator James Couzens.

Here was a man unique in the position he occupied. Possessed of material wealth far beyond the average and wholly unfettered by the usual political subserviences that weigh upon so many public men, he constantly exhibited during his long service in the Senate a fine force of character that must have brought him the fealty of his colleagues and most certainly the admiration and respect of his countrymen.

Unswerving loyalty by vote and voice to the principles he believed in guided every step of his distinguished senatorial career. No caprice of expediency and no pandering to the electorate at the expense of the truth and the right marked this man. The record shows that he was a Senator in the truest and best sense of the word, an independent ambassador of the sovereign people striving always for the greatest good of the greatest number.

The country and the Senate can ill afford to sacrifice such a man and Michigan, I think, least of all.

The Politics Of Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Joseph E. Gedra claims communism was the root of the trouble in Spain. The facts clearly show that the present government in Spain is a democratic-republic, established constitutionally and based purely on majority rule.

As a result of the last election the Fascist-Monarchists found themselves in the minority, the Left Republicans (similar to our Progressives) winning the largest number of seats in Parliament. President Azana, chosen by Parliament, is also a Left Republican. Both Fascist-Monarchists and Communists are minority parties.

Socialists, winning the second largest number of seats, helped to elect Mr. Azana. But the Fascist-Monarchist revolution had been in progress more than two months before a single Socialist or Communist was appointed to the Spanish cabinet. Now it contains six Socialists, only two Communists, while seven other members belong to the other parties of the Popular Front.

Mr. Gedra fails to state what forces precipitated the revolution against the duly elected and constituted Spanish government. It was the Fascists and Monarchists who were chagrined because they did not win the democratically-held election at which all parties voted. And no one questions that it was anything but an honest election. The Socialist and Communist parties did not rebel because they failed to win the mandate to form a cabinet. They "took it on the chin" just as they do in this country. In fact, both of these parties swung to the support of the government as soon as the Fascists started their revolution, though at that time neither party had any representation in the cabinet.

The new premier, Caballero, is not a Communist, but a Socialist. The Communists probably do not thoroughly approve of the Left Republican government, but as between a progressive democracy and a Fascist-Monarchist dictatorship by the reactionaries, the Communists quickly chose the democracy. And that is where they showed good sense, whatever mistakes of judgment they may have made in other countries. Spain had a Fascist dictatorship for several years, and it failed miserably, just as the monarchy failed, so far as 90 per cent of the people were concerned.

The League And I. L. O. Contrasted.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Anyone who visits Europe for any length of time these days comes away with the conviction that if anything is to save Europe from the plight of Prussia after the Thirty Years' War, it can only be a League of Nations. But it must be a genuine League of Nations, and not simply a league of governments, as the present League is.

Governments are not interested in peace. They are not interested in disarmament. They are not interested in economic agreements. Fundamentally they are interested only in the perpetuation of their own power. Having been created as an expression of nationalism, they continue an expression of nationalism; and they cannot be modified to be an expression of anything else as long as the peoples of the world have no effective international medium through which they can enforce their welfare upon their governments. The League of Nations was based upon the false assumption that governments were interested in an experiment of that kind. Strong governments were not and never will be. The League has been a method of conference which national governments could use if they so desired. They have not so desired; and it is time to try a league of another kind.

The International Labor Organization in Geneva does not deal with political questions. Its field is a relatively restricted one: international labor legislation. Its difficulties have not been as great as the League's. Consequently, too much cannot be made of its success in contrast with the obvious failure of the League. Nevertheless, those who have familiarized themselves with the history and development of the League and of the I. L. O. year by year are agreed that even the I. L. O., in its relatively limited sphere, might have succumbed to the same sort of deterioration as the League had it not been for one potent difference in the construction of the two international organizations.

The League was constructed as a league of governments and nothing else. The I. L. O. was constructed as a league of governments, employers and workers. In the League only governments are represented. In the I. L. O. three groups are represented.

Any deliberate student of our post-war international institutions finds that the success of the I. L. O. in developing international labor conventions and seeing that they are properly carried out is due more to the pressure which labor can bring to bear both upon national governments and upon the I. L. O. than to any other single factor.

Governments might easily have hamstrung the I. L. O. just as they have hamstrung the League. Governments and employers together would undoubtedly have hamstrung the I. L. O. But when labor was given direct representation in the organization a means was given to the plain people all over the world, irrespective of nationality, and regardless of the interests of national governments, to insist upon progress in this field of international cooperation. Labor representatives vote, talk and caucus as they wish in the I. L. O.; they are not subject to any restriction whatever; and it has been this international cooperation and leadership on the part of labor which has kept governments moving ahead with labor legislation.

The I. L. O. deals with labor questions. Why cannot a League of Nations, which deals with other questions, also be made representative of the people? Are governments the only groups which have an interest in peace, in order, in trade, in employment? Are not the people also interested in these things? Why should they not have representation in a League of Nations, just as they have representation in an International Labor Organization?

At a time when the reform of the League is being much discussed, let consideration be given to a reform which will go to one of the principal sources of the weakness of the League. If reform is to be undertaken, let it be a reform which will strengthen the League and increase its usefulness.

The Post Impressionist

Benefits Of Balance.

Post Office, Saturday.

"THE thing that's the matter with Washington street car-riders," said a Washington street car-conductor, "they haven't got balance."

The Post-Impressionist replied that he'd detected a need of balance, particularly if standing in a car when it rounded a curve.

But the conductor explained:

"Oh, I wasn't trying to be funny. I leave that to my passengers.

"I'm talking about when you call mental balance—seeing both sides of a thing.

* * *

"What I mean," he said, "there's a lot of criticism. I mean of us. Passengers—at least, they call themselves passengers, only they don't sound like they had the price of a span of tokens, let alone a pass. Anyhow, people that call themselves passengers are always writing letters to newspapers where they suffer so from the way the streetcars treat them. Especially us conductors and motormen.

"If they had balance, they wouldn't.

* * *

"I'm not saying," said the streetcar conductor, "the streetcar-service in this city's all it might be. But I'm not saying it's all it oughtn't to be either. What I'm saying, there's two ways of looking at it . . .

"Whereas, to hear them talk, you'd think they were the whole human race.

"Take the way they start the car before they're half on it: it's always a woman says that. No matter what first name she signs to her newspaper-letter, its always a woman. Do you know why?

"Because, when a man starts to get on a car, all he thinks about is getting on quick, so's he can grab a seat. But when a woman starts to get on a car, all she thinks about is whether she hasn't forgotten to pass along some of her shopping-thoughts to the woman she's been shopping with—who's standing out there in the street and going to take another car.

"She'll keep my car waiting—only she calls it her car—while she calls out to her friend just why she feels sure they done right getting the higher priced stockings, because you get more wear for your money out of the more expensive grade. And then she gets mad if I shut the door in the middle of where she's going on about how she thinks mebbe they made a mistake not getting the cheaper gloves.

* * *

"The reason us conductors shut the car-doors before such women are ready to start is if we didn't shut the doors they'd never be ready to start.

"And then," said the conductor, "take the men that try to get on at the front of the car and raise hell with the motorman when he tells them only them with passes can do it.

"They know the rule, but they think it ought to be suspended when the rear platform's so full of people with passes there's not any room on it for any guy that comes along and wants to pay his fare.

* * *

"Why can't people like that see the other side of a question?

"They ought to see it isn't the motorman's fault. If they just got to give somebody hell, why don't they give it to the passengers at the rear, who're too many for them to get on the car the only way you have a right to unless you've got a pass?

* * *

"Then," the conductor said, "there's the people who are always kicking at us because the stop-call bells don't work. You know what I mean: I mean the buttons a passenger pushes to tell the motorman he wants to get off at the next stop—if it rings. Always calling us down because it don't ring!

"Now listen, I ask you:

"Any fool can tell a bell rings if it rings. But how's the wisest man that ever lived going to know a bell won't ring if it don't?

* * *

"But of course the thing Washington streetcar-passengers complain about most is how the cars are crowded, rush-hours.

* * *

"Well, I admit they are. I'll bet you anything you like there isn't one of us conductors, or motormen either, wouldn't admit it. Do those passengers believe we like being jammed so we can't punch a transfer or turn a brake? I'll say we know the cars are crowded, rush-hours.

"O. K., then.

"But let me ask you this one:

"Who crowds 'em?

* * *

"You know as well as I do:

"The people who crowd the cars are the very people who complain about the cars being crowded!

* * *

Fair Enough

Astor, Not Simpson.

Just for effect I am going to substitute another name for that of Lawrence Simpson, the native American sailor who has been locked up in a German prison for a year and three months awaiting trial charged with the possession of seditious documents in his private locker aboard an American ship. I shall imagine for the moment that the prisoner is Vincent Astor, the rich personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt, who has often entertained the President aboard his yacht, the Nourmahal, on vacation cruises.

We are assuming that the millionaire friend of the President was off on a cruise in the Nourmahal and put into Cuxhaven, Germany, where Simpson was arrested, to buy some caviar and duck and other stores for his boat. While the ship lay in Cuxhaven a Nazi agent came aboard, went through Mr. Astor's private quarters, opened his safe and discovered a personal letter from a friend in the United States which said, in part: "Our American democracy is much superior to the Nazi theory, and Hitler is, to my mind, a madman."

• • • •

The Nazi agent said this was clearly seditious, took Mr. Astor ashore, locked him up and refused to let him communicate with anyone.

However, word of the arrest leaked out, was cabled back to the United States and caused a great commotion in Washington. The President called up Mr. Hull, the Secretary of State, in the middle of the night, and Mr. Hull immediately got onto the transatlantic phone to Berlin to stir up the Ambassador. There was no need for that, however, because the Ambassador already had been at work for hours, dealing direct with the foreign office, and the unfortunate incident was rapidly approaching a happy solution.

Within a day Mr. Astor had been released with the regrets and best wishes of the Nazi authorities and was inclined to treat the whole affair as an amusing experience. The official who made the arrest had been disciplined for a stupid blunder, the prestige of the American passport had been sustained and the rights of American citizens in foreign ports had been stoutly upheld by the United States Department of State.

• • • •

That, however, was Vincent Astor, the millionaire friend and host of the President and not a common forecastle hand on an American ship.

The forecastle hand, Lawrence Simpson, possessed an American passport exactly the same as any other, and the same laws were supposed to cover his case, but he was tossed into prison, where he has been held for 15 months. His health declined, he became emaciated and the American State Department refused to give him any protection on the ground that the case was not a diplomatic but a consular matter. He could wait. His time was worth only $40 a month, anyway.

Simpson's case finally attracted the attention of a young man named Gifford A. Cochran, a Yale graduate of the Class of '29, whose family name was famous on the sport pages of this country a few years ago when his late father owned Flying Ebony, the Derby winner, and Coventry, the winner of the Preakness in 1926.

It is odd to discover a scion of one of the famous American fortunes fighting for the freedom and American rights of an obscure sailor, because the prominent young scions are mostly to be found in stylish saloons or gambling houses.

However, Mr. Corcoran is a scion of a different sort, and last July he went to Berlin at his own expense on his own initiative to investigate the case of Lawrence Simpson—who is not Vincent Astor by many million dollars and no personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt. Before leaving for Berlin Mr. Cochran visited the State Department with the old father of the sailor, who wept when the Undersecretary of the department, Mr. James Clement Dunn, in a mood of broad facetiousness, asked him, "Well, what do you want us to do? Send a battleship over for your boy?"

• • • •

In Berlin Mr. Cochran finally was allowed to see Lawrence Simpson—not Vincent Astor—in the presence of the Nazi jailers, but was not permitted to inquire whether he had been beaten, tortured or starved or to discuss the charges. He could only offer to help, and Simpson, suspicious of everyone now, was afraid to sign a power of attorney for him.

So Lawrence Simpson, a poor man, an American sailor, born in Illinois—not Vincent Astor, the millionaire friend and host of President Roosevelt, you may be sure—still lies in prison in Germany, sick, worried, abandoned by his Government, ignored by a State Department which traditionally does not stoop to the problems of poor Americans, awaiting trial before a Nazi court, where his defense will be placed in the hands of a Nazi lawyer who is required by Nazi law to be a member of the gang.

Garfield's Death

By William Lyon Phelps.

Fifty-five years ago today, September 19, 1881, James Abram Garfield, President of the United States, died at Elberon, N. J. He was shot by a man named Guiteau on July 2.

Garfield was born November 19, 1831, in a log cabin in Ohio. He had to work hard on a farm as a boy, but he was ambitious with a consuming thirst for an education. He walked to Cleveland, got a job on a canal boat; then for four years he struggled against great obstacles to enter college, working as carpenter, farmer, teacher and preacher.

• • • •

He wished to obtain the best education at an Eastern college. He wrote to the presidents of three New England colleges; from two of them he received what we call today a "form" letter. But the president of Williams College added to the form letter one line of personal welcome and encouragement. As a result of that courtesy, which cost half a second of time, Williams obtained among her graduates a President of the United States and a president of Williams, for Garfield's son filled that office.

On the other hand, who can tell! If Garfield had not gone to Williams, it is just possible that he might not have been assassinated, for he was on his way to attend the Williams College commencement, when he was shot at the Washington railway station. Guiteau took that opportunity. Probably he would have found another, but Guiteau was somewhat unbalanced, and the impulse might not have been elsewhere or on another day completed by action.

• • • •

Garfield entered the Ohio Senate in 1859, enlisted in the Civil War and, through gallantry in action, became major general. In 1862 he took his seat in Congress and in 1880 was elected United States Senator. In the national Republican convention of that year he made so magnificent a speech nominating Sherman, that he "stole the show," though he was absolutely sincere in his support of Sherman and had had no thought of the Presidency. But when it became clear in the convention that Sherman could not be nominated, Garfield was finally chosen.

I well remember the terrible shock to the whole country caused by his assassination. My father tried to read aloud to us the newspaper account and cried so that he finally had to stop. He had an immense admiration for Garfield.

The President lived a little over two months after he was shot. The assassin lived about 12 months.

Report On Sweden

Riksdag Elections Tomorrow May Cut Social Democrats' Majority; Nation Shows Steady Upward Swing In Profits.

By S. Miles Bouton.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Stockholm.

It is 13½ years since I was last in Sweden, where I had my home for nearly 3 years. I come back to find an all but incredible improvement in every respect but one. The Swedish beer is quite as bad as it used to be.

This may seem, at first sight, a frivolous remark, but it is not frivolous. For of what other country can it be said that everything in it has improved except its beer? I know none. Moreover, as patriotic Swedes point out, the Swedish brewers can make and are making first-class beer, but only for export; the Swedes themselves may have none of it under the famous "Stockholm system," which has reduced drunkenness to a figure even below the highest hopes of the men who thought out the system.

Its main feature has often been described. Briefly, every citizen who pays his taxes, is not a drunkard, does not beat his wife and is not on relief, can buy a reasonable amount of spirits and wine on presentation of his "motbok," or passbook. To secure spirits in hotels and restaurants it is necessary to buy a meal costing about 39 cents. One may then have 15 centiliters of distilled spirits, about 4½ ounces. One can, of course, buy as many meals as one will, but the Swedes hold to the old saying that it is better to ruin the stomach than to make the landlord a present, and they will not pay for a meal which they cannot eat.

Ready-Made Clothing Brings Classes Together.

STRIKING is the well-dressed appearance of the people of all classes. Believers in the theory of economic determinism, that is, who believe that in the last analysis all ethical, sociological and cultural aspects of life are determined by purely materialistic factors, will find support in the words of one of Stockholm's veteran journalists. We were discussing class differences and democracy.

"The Swedes," he said, "are genuinely democratic people despite their formal manners and what may seem on the surface to be class distinctions. You may be inclined to smile at what I am about to say, but it is true nevertheless. The former gulf between the so-called upper and lower classes has been narrowed, and not merely outwardly, by the rapid development in Sweden in the last decade in the ready-made clothing industry.

"As you have noticed, all Swedes are uniformly well dressed, and the effect has been an increase of the laboring population's self-respect and self-reliance. One or the other labor union occasionally subscribes for all seats at the Royal Opera or the Dramatic Theater, and you could not tell from watching the audience that it was not a bourgeois assembly. It is quite as well dressed and quite as well behaved."

One sees a surprising number of autos in Gothenberg and Stockholm. With some 200,000 in the whole country, the ratio is one to every 33 persons. Poor people cannot own autos. Just now an energetic movement has been started to reduce taxes on autos and thus place them within the reach of wider circles of the population.

Gasoline costs 26 cents a gallon, of which 40 per cent is tax used to build improved roads, of which there are already many. The automobile tax brought in about $24,000,000 in 1935, which means an average tax per auto of $120.

Lacking Marxist Aid, Democrats Are Weakened.

ELECTIONS to the first and second chamber of the Riksdag, the Swedish Parliament, will be held on September 20. The Social-Democrats, whose leader, Per Albin Hansson, headed the cabinet for the last four years, represent the largest party in the country, having had 102 of the second chamber's 230 deputies and 65 of the first chamber's 152 members. They may make small gains, but their chances of forming the next government are worsened by the fact that in this campaign, for the first time, they have no so-called "cartel" with the other two Marxist parties—the Socialists, with eight men in the last second chamber, Communists of the Trotzky school and the Muscovite Communists, who had two deputies. These two reddest parties are fighting each other bitterly, and both are fighting the Social-Democrats.

Americans may have wondered how and why Sweden has been able to make such an astounding economic recovery under Social-Democratic rule. The answer is that the Swedish Socialists merely think they are socialists. They employ the Marxist jargon and talk about internationalism and the unity of interests of the proletariat of all lands, but they are actually moderate liberals, and, despite all talk about internationalism, Swedes first, last, and all the time.

Their leader, former Premier Hansson, whose popularity is attested by the fact that he is known to every one in the kingdom as "Per Albin," is universally respected. King Gustaf likes him as a man, and is reported to have said when he became prime minister: "Splendid! Finally we have a good bridge player at the head of the cabinet."

The Swedish Social-Democrats also—another striking difference from most Marxists—are practical realists. I asked abou ttheir socializing program.

"The first thing we ask, and the determinative thing," said the party official with whom I was talking, "is this: Will the socializing of this or that thing be to the advantage of our whole country? If it is not, that ends it. And we have found that in certain cases the time is not yet ripe for such a step, and we lay theories aside."

It is to be remembered in this connection that many essential undertakings in most European countries have long since been made the property of state or cities, notably the telegraph and telephone. Tobacco has been a government monopoly in Sweden for many years, as has also the liquor trade.

Socialists, Once Slashers Of Army, Now Raise Defenses.

THE SWEDISH Socialists, who disbanded some 12 regiments of the standing army when they came to power 12 years ago, are now supporting measures which will materially strengthen the country's defensive power and make any attack on it very expensive.

Nevertheless, as far as I can learn by talking with many representative men, the Swedes do not look for a European war for years to come.

I hope they are right, but I am sure they are wrong. The old friendly feeling for Germany survives, but not for Naziism, which is opposed to everything for which the Swedes stand. It is cheering to be able to report that the Nazis have not only made no headway in Sweden, despite costly initial attempts, but they have apparently given up their propaganda as a hopeless job. And, as far as I can learn, Herr Goebbels has stopped pouring corruption funds into the country. A similar situation is reported as to Denmark. Norway, of course, was a hopeless case from the start.

The economic progress of Sweden has been so adequately reported that there is little occasion to add to it. Going through the monthly reports of the last year one finds a recurring theme: Earnings show steady increases over the preceding month. Here, however, are two or three items to amaze the average American readers.

"The total Swedish state revenues during the past fiscal year have exceeded the preliminary budget estimates by 70,000,000 crowns. The biggest contribution to the increase came from the Swedish state railways, which yielded 40,000,000, instead of the estimated 26,000,000.

"Sweden's national debt was decreased in July by 15,000,000 crowns.

"A net surplus on the 1935 budget of the City of Stockholm of 17,000,000 crowns (over $4,440,000) is reported. This is the largest surplus since 1923.

Numbers Rackets Charged to 2 Here

The vice squad yesterday raided two alleged "numbers" establishments, arresting two men on charges of operating a lottery. They were released in $1,500 bond each following a hearing before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage.

Clarence W. Bernhardt, 49, 1126 I street northeast, was taken into custody at a grocery store in the 400 block of Rhode Island avenue northwest. Thirty-nine "numbers" books were confiscated, police said. Arraigned before Turnage, Bernhardt pleaded not guilty and was ordered released in $1,500 bond for a hearing October 2.

Jacob Goldberg, arrested at his home in the 2100 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest, pleaded guilty to the lottery charge, was ordered held for grand jury action and released on bond of $1,500.

Little Entente Outlook.

"The Little Entente and its allies will be able to stop the drive of any force that threatens the peace of Europe."

Thus spoke a Czech statesman in an address to the Little Entente which held its regular quarterly session at Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, early this week. His were brave words. At the very time this meeting was taking place Hitler, at Nuremberg, was declaring war on communism; the Russian army had just completed its maneuvers; the threat of general war embodied in the Spanish crisis was flaming into new life. It is by no means clear, therefore, whether the Czech statesman in question was merely whistling to keep up his courage or asserting what really is an actuality.

When it functions as a unit, as it has frequently done during recent years, the Little Entente can with justice lay claim to the distinction of being the sixth great power in Europe. Its power and influence have for years been recognized at Geneva, where the Little Entente states, in rotation, invariably occupy one of the non-permanent seats on the League Council.

Together, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania, the three nations forming the Little Entente, have a population of around 48,000,000. Their standing armies have a personnel of 505,000 officers and men. Under strong leadership, there is no question that the Little Entente does constitute a bloc of considerable importance in support of peace. But is the Little Entente united?

• • • •

Last May, when it met at Belgrade, its unity was not open to question. The communique issued after the meeting was guilty of no more than normal rhetorical exaggeration when it declared the three states "indissolubly bound" in "deep and complete unity over their entire international policy." The communique issued after the Bratislava meeting was equally insistent on the similarity of aims and policies of the Little Entente. But that unity is at the moment under a cloud.

On one point the three nations think, and are unquestionably prepared to act, as one. Each of them contains within its borders land that formerly belonged to Hungary; all are determined to fight any attempt by that nation to regain its lost territories.

All three, although to a varying degree, are also opposed to the restoration of the Hapsburgs either in Hungary or Austria. But while Czechoslovakia is equally opposed to Austro-German Anchluss, Yugoslavia and Rumania would very likely prefer that solution of the Austrian problem to the return of the Hapsburgs.

But the Austrian problem is by no means the only one on which the members of the Little Entente differ. Although each of them is an ally of France, they are not equally prepared to follow the French lead in all matters of international concern. Indeed, while the link between Czechoslovakia and France appears to be as firm as it ever was, those between France, on the one hand, and Rumania and Yugoslavia on the other, are not.

It was announced at Bucharest at the time of the recent cabinet change, which resulted in the elimination of Titulescu as foreign minister, that Rumanian foreign policy was in no way involved in this governmental reorganization. Yet more than a suspicion exists that Titulescu was forced out as a result of the intrigues of the Iron Guard and other pro-Nazi groups and that, henceforth, Rumania's future orientation would be more pro-German and less pro-French than it had been; above all that Titulescu's pro-Russian policy will be placed on the shelf.

• • • •

As an ally of Russia, to which it looks for support against an aggressive Germany, this development has given considerable concern to Czechoslovakia. Without Rumania's willingness to permit Russian troops and planes transit across Rumanian soil, the potential military co-operation between Czechoslovakia and Rumania is greatly weakened. Now Rumania shows signs of slipping back into that state of anti-Soviet hostility such as existed for years after the war, while Yugoslavia continues to be as hostile to Moscow as it ever was. It has steadily refused to establish normal diplomatic relations with Russia.

What is even worse from the Czech standpoint, Germany's commercial drive in Yugoslavia has been quite successful. More and more, Yugoslavia is moving into the commercial orbit of Berlin. Nominally its diplomatic ties with France remain. But the Belgrade government has not overcome the suspicion that flamed up at the time of M. Laval's ill-fated visit to Rome at the beginning of last year, that in the last aalysis France might sacrifice Yugoslavia to win over Fascist Italy.

On more than one ground, therefore, can it be said that the Bratislava meeting of the Little Entente was no unqualified success. Yet the ties binding the three nations have survived many stresses and strains during the past decade. Very likely they will endure even the present disagreements. For if it is beset by forces that tend to disturb its unity, its continuation as an anti-Magyar combination is certain. In a short time the foreign ministers of Italy, Austria and Hungary are to meet in Vienna further to cement that bond between the three countries established at the Rome meeting of March, 1934. Should this lead to a strengthening of Hungary's position, the fears this would arouse at Belgrade, Bucharest and Prague would make them forget their present disagreements and again close their ranks.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Thoughts on Horse Racing.

Horse racing is a sport devoted to the proposition that all men are created gullible.

• • • • •

It is said to be the sport of kings because everybody who follows it gets crowned.

• • • •

There are more horse tracks operating in America today than ever before and the number of people who go around muttering out of the corners of their mouths has increased 87 per cent in the last four years.

• • • • •

Horse racing is conducted to improve the breed, but on the cards offered today at any track at least 50 per cent of the steeds would be disowned by their own parents.

• • • •

Watch the performance of the great majority of the beagles entered in American races and you will get rid of the belief that just because there are no more hacks there are no more hack horses.

• • • • •

Outside of the stake races you will see horses that no discriminating old-time horse-car motorman would allow on either end of his car.

• • • • •

The only thing that makes it certain they are horses is that they won't chase cats.

• • • •

The jockeys in many cases don't know whether they are bringing home a horse or an antique.

• • • • •

These horses wear numbers on their saddles to distinguish them, but this is unnecessary. You can tell them by their infirmities.

• • • •

We love horses as much as anybody, but we don't think letting a horse continue his racing career long after he has unraveled constitutes red-hot affection.

• • • •

We think a fan should be able to tell that a race is on from the action rather than from the body squeaks.

• • • •

If it is still the sport of kings there isn't a monarch around loose who couldn't be locked up by the S. P. C. A.

• • • •

What puzzles some fans is that they see the same horses day after day, week after week, and season after season. But no overwork is involved. Those beagles get their rest during races.

Text of Roosevelt Speech

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 18.—The text of the address delivered by President Roosevelt today at Harvard University's tercentenary follows:

I am here today in a joint and several capacity. First, as the President of the United States. Second, as chairman of the United States Harvard Tercentenary Commission, which is composed of five members of the Senate, five members of the House of Representatives, a representative of the United States Army and one of the Navy, and two representatives of the universities of the United States, the distinguished presidents of the Universities of California and North Carolina. Finally, I am here as a son of Harvard who gladly returns to this spot where men have sought truth for 300 years.

The roots of Harvard are deep in the past. It is pleasant to remember today that this meeting is being held in pursuance of an adjournment expressly taken 100 years ago on motion of Josiah Quincy.

Were Sorely Troubled.

At that time many of the alumni of Harvard were sorely troubled concerning the state of the Nation. Andrew Jackson was President. On the 250th anniversary of the founding of Harvard College, alumni again were sorely troubled. Grover Cleveland was President. Now, on the 300th anniversary, I am President.

In the words of Euripides:

"There be many shapes of mystery.
And many things God makes to be,
Past hope or fear.
And the end men looked for cometh not.
So hath it fallen here."

In spite of fears, Harvard and the Nation of which it is a part have marched steadily to new and successful achievements, changing their formations and their strategy to meet new conditions; but marching always under the old banner of freedom.

In the olden days of New England it was Increase Mather who told the students of Harvard that they were "pledged to the word of no particular master;" that they should "above all find a friend in truth."

Still Creed of Harvard.

That became the creed of Harvard. Behind the tumult and the shouting it is still the creed of Harvard.

In this day of modern witch-burning, when freedom of thought has been exiled from many lands which were once its home, it is the part of Harvard and America to stand for the freedom of the human mind and to carry the torch of truth.

The truth is great and will prevail. For centuries that grand old saying has been a rock of support for persecuted men.

But it depends on men's tolerance, self-restraint and devotion to freedom, not only for themselves but also for others, whether the truth will prevail through free research, free discussion and the free intercourse of civilized men, or will prevail only after suppression and suffering—when none cares whether it prevails or not.

"Liberty and Freedom."

Love of liberty and freedom of thought is a most admirable attribute of Harvard. But it is not an exclusive possession of Harvard or of any other university in America. Love of liberty and freedom of thought are as profound in the homes, on the farms and in the factories of this country as in any university. Liberty is the air Americans breathe.

Our Government is based on the belief that a people can be both strong and free, that civilized men need no restraint but that imposed by themselves against abuse of freedom. Nevertheless, it is the peculiar task of Harvard and every other university and college in this country to foster and maintain not only freedom within its own walls but also tolerance, self-restraint, fair-dealing and devotion to the truth throughout America.

Many students who have come to Harvard in the past have left it with inquiring and open minds, ready to render service to the Nation. They have been given much and from them much has been expected. They have rendered great service.

It is, I am confident, of the inner essence of Harvard that its sons have fully participated in each great drama of our Nation's history. They have met the challenge of the event; they have seen in the challenge opportunity to fulfill the end the university exists to serve. As the Chief Executive of the Nation I bring you the solicitation of our people. In the name of the American Nation I venture to ask you to cherish its traditions and to fulfill its highest opportunities.

The Nation needs from Harvard today men like Charles William Eliot, William James and Justice Holmes, who made their minds swords in the service of American freedom.

They served America with courage, wisdom and human understanding. They were without hatred, malice or selfishness. They were civilized gentlemen.

Pleads for Tolerance.

The past of Harvard has been deeply distinguished. This university will never fail to produce its due proportion of those judged successful by the common standard of success. Of such the world has need. But to produce that type is not, I am sure, the ultimate justification that you would make for Harvard, rather do we here search for the atmosphere in which men are produced who have either the rare quality of vision or the ability to appreciate the significance of vision when it appears. Where there is vision, there is tolerance; and where there is tolerance, there is peace. And I beg you to think of tolerance and peace not as indifferent and neutral virtues but as active and positive principles.

I am not, you will observe, conceiving of the university as a mere spectator of the great national and international drama in which all of us, despite ourselves, are involved. Here are to be trained not lawyers and doctors merely, not teachers and businessmen merely; here is to be trained in the fullest sense—man.

Harvard should train men to be citizens in that high Athenian sense which compels a man to live his life unceasingly aware that its civic significance is its most abiding, and that the rich individual diversity of the truly civilized state is born only of the wisdom to choose ways to achieve which do not hurt one's neighbors.

Defines the "Real" Scholar.

I am asking the sons of Harvard to dedicate themselves not only to the perpetuation, but also to the enlargement of that spirit.

To pay ardent reverence to the past but to recognize no less the direction of the future; to understand philosophies we do not accept and hopes we find it difficult to share; to account the service of mankind the highest ambition a man can follow, and to know that there is no calling so humble that it cannot be instinct with that ambition; never to be indifferent to what may affect our neighbors; always as Coleridge said, to put truth in the first place and not in the second; these I would affirm are the qualities by which the "real" is distinguished from the "nominal" scholar.

It is only when we have attained this philosophy that we can "above all find a friend in truth." When America is dedicated to that end by the common will of all her citizens, then America can accomplish her highest ideals. To the measure that Harvard participates in that dedication, Harvard will be justified of her effort, her purpose and her success in the fourth century of her life.

Interest, Discount Rate Data Sought

By the Associated Press.

Federal Reserve Board officials yesterday requested Federal Reserve banks to gather information from member institutions on interest and discount rates.

In order to gain a comprehensive picture of interest rates throughout the country, the board requested data as of October 1 on savings and time deposit interest rates, and interest and discount rates on various classes of loans.

This data will include information on agricultural, commercial, real estate and other loans, officials said, and will give the board a well-rounded summary of interest charges.

Maine Results Indicate Close Election Race

Dr. Gallup Notes Gain of 10 Points Since 1932 Balloting.

By George Gallup.

Copyright, 1936, by American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Sept. 18.—Now that the tumult and shouting over the Maine election has died down, most non-partisan analysts will agree that the voting showed two things:

1. The Republican Party has made a decided comeback since 1932, paralleling an unmistakable trend away from Roosevelt.

2. The Maine election, despite Democratic losses, points neither to a clear victory for the Republicans in November nor to a smashing defeat for Roosevelt, but rather to a close election.

In the two contests in Maine where a comparison with 1932 is possible—the vote for governor and the vote for Representatives in Congress—the Republicans proved to be between 8 and 10 points stronger than they were four years ago. Republican candidates for the House polled 49 per cent of the major party vote in 1932, and 59 per cent in last Monday's election—a gain of 10 points.

The Maine election furnished an indication of the accuracy of the institute's polls. Prior to last Monday's voting, the polls had shown a drop of 11 points in Democratic strength in Maine since 1932. As already noted, there was an actual drop of 10 points in the Democratic vote for Representatives and of eight points in the vote for Governor.

Miss Chase To Make Bow In December

Accomplished in Sports, She Enjoys Writing and Gardening.

By Marylyn Reeve.

Another name—that of Miss Margot Chase, daughter of Mrs. C. Alden Chase—was added yesterday to the growing list of debutantes who will bow to Capital society this season.

Miss Chase plans to continue her senior year studies at Smith College and return to Washington for the festivities and occasional week-ends.

Tall and dark, she is accomplished in many sports, with swimming topping the list. For several summers she attended Camp Onaway, N. H., and this year went back as counselor and swimming instructress. Horseback riding, tennis and squash also are favorites with her. A recent addition to her accomplishments is fencing.

But not all of Miss Chase's time is devoted to sports. On rainy days she turns to gardening, and is particularly interested in ivy. A visit to her home on California street would disclose huge glass bowls of ivy tucked artistically away in nooks and corners and on sills. Majoring in English at college, Miss Chase turns to writing frequently and has an assortment of rollicking short stories in her collection.

Teas are the popular debut parties this year, with many around each holiday. Miss Chase has not as yet selected her date, but it probably will be during the Christmas holidays. The affair will be given by her cousin, Mrs. B. Paulding Lamberton, at her home on Kalorama road.

After visiting the latter's mother, Mrs. Harry Clabaugh, at her Maryland home, Antrim, Miss Chase rejoined her mother here a few days ago. She will leave September 28 for Smith College.

Accomplished Young Equestrienne

Little Miss Mary Lou Miles, daughter of Commander and Mrs. A. C. Miles, and her constant companion, Kelly, graciously pose before starting off for a canter over nearby bridle paths. Miss Miles, who rides both astride and sidesaddle, has entered her string of mounts in the Spring Valley Horse Show this afternoon.

Foxhunting Season Near For Loudoun

Foxes in Plenty Are Reported and Hounds Already Exercising.

Many From Washington Officers of the County Hunt Organization.

By Grace Brooks.

Although the weather is too warm for fox hunting, hounds of the Loudoun Hunt go out in the early mornings for exercise and several good short runs have been reported by Judge J. R. H. Alexander, M. F. H. Foxes are reported plentiful and the hunters are looking forward eagerly to crisp, cool days when the hills and valleys of Loudoun will resound again with the familiar music of packs in full cry and the tide of scarlet-coated huntsmen will follow.

In northern Virginia the red fox is regarded as the section's best real estate salesman. The region is adorned with estates built by sportsmen of the North and East who have settled there mainly because the territory provides foxes that run, and a galloping country.

A number of Washingtonians who have country homes in Loudoun are officers of the Loudoun Hunt. Among these are Mr. W. H. Lipscomb, president; Miss Anna Hedrick and Mr. P. A. Wilmer, who are on the board of governors; Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley and Mr. David N. Rust, jr., who are vice presidents.

Leesburg sportsmen who hold office include Mrs. Clara Frye, secretary; Mr. W. F. Peach, treasurer, and Mrs. Albert White, Mr. Howard E. Cole, Mr. W. A. Metzger, Mr. Charles Lee, Mr. F. H. Malone, Mr. L. C. Hoge, Mr. S. H. Hall and Mr. R. T. Corbell.

Hunts in the section consist of the Piedmont Hounds at Upperville, the oldest recognized hunt in America, with Dr. A. C. Randolph, M. F. H., which goes out twice a week; the Middleburg Hunt, of which Miss Charlotte H. Noland, headmistress of Foxcroft, and Daniel C. Sands are joint masters, which hunts three times a week, and the Loudoun Hunt.

Fox hunting has flourished in northern Virginia since about 1757. Sportsmen penetrating from the tidewater area found the section a good country in which to ride to hounds—its fields far-flung, its valleys broad and its coverts harboring foxes. George Washington, who maintained a celebrated pack at Mount Vernon and regularly rode to hounds, described it as "a course fashioned for the bold and animated sport." Not until 30 or more years ago, however, was the sport formally organized under sanction of the Master of Fox Hounds Association.

Hunting territories are designated on specially drafted maps, with the boundaries of each hunt clearly marked. One hunt may not invade another's territory without permission of the master of the other, except that a fox started before a pack may be followed into the territory of another club. The hunts work in close co-operation with landowners for without their good will the hunts would cease to exist.

First Lady Forced to Cancel Engagements for First Time

Mrs. Roosevelt Never Before Has Been Confined Under Doctor's Orders Since She Entered White House; Will Go to Hyde Park.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

For the first time in her nearly four years of residence at the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt is unable to fulfill her social engagements because of illness. Washington society learned with much regret Thursday that Mrs. Roosevelt was confined to her bed by an attack of influenza, and had been obliged to cancel her plans to attend the conference on the Mobilization for Human Needs, an organization in which she is deeply interested and has played a prominent part as chairman of the woman's national advisory committee.

Mrs. Roosevelt arrived in Washington Wednesday from her home in Hyde Park, N. Y., where she has been for several weeks, expressly to attend the sessions of the conference. She had been suffering from what had been considered to be only a slight cold. However, it was found to be more serious after her arrival.

The last time Mrs. Roosevelt was in Washington was when she came several weeks ago to attend the funeral of Secretary of War Dern. At that time she appeared in perfect health and told friends she had spent an enjoyable summer. Part of her vacation was spent in Campobello, the Roosevelt summer home in Nova Scotia, where she was joined by the President after he completed his cruise with their three sons.

Although Mrs. Roosevelt has suffered before with colds since her husband entered the White House, this is the first time she has been ill enough to be confined to her room under doctor's orders. Usually she rejoices in splendid health and has endured the gruelling round of official duties which falls to the lot of the First Lady, with remarkable vitality.

Like Mrs. Herbert Hoover, who immediately preceded her at the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt is of the athletic type, fond of swimming, horseback riding, camping and long walks. Mrs. Hoover came to the White House with the record of never having been ill in bed in her life. She maintained this record until the spring of the year before March 4, 1933, when her husband's term was ended. She was confined to her room then for several weeks, but, with intrepid spirit, she received many women callers and even delegations of women while she was ill.

Washington society remembers the serious illness of Mrs. Warren G. Harding when rumors were rife through the city that she was dying. She recovered, however, to take part again in the social life of the White House and to accompany President Harding on his last trip to Alaska.

Mrs. Coolidge was never seriously ill in the White House, although several times she had slight attacks of influenza and colds which forced her to cancel her social engagements for a day or two.

The beauty of the Italian gardens about the south portico and wings of the Executive Mansion can be directly ascribed to the long illness there of the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. When she grew better, Mrs. Wilson, who was an artist, sat at her bedroom window, looking down onto the grounds and there planned and gave directions for the laying out of the gardens.

Mrs. Roosevelt, upon her recovery from her present illness, will return to Hyde Park to remain until she returns to Washington with the President next month for the fall season.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Twice Deserted by Husband, Young Mother Wonders if She Should Seek Divorce or Await His Return.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We married very young and made a big mistake. A few weeks ago he deserted me. We have a child 4 years old and because of him, I have asked my husband to try again. He has refused, because he says it will be the same thing again. As for me, I don't care because of the way he has treated me. He always took great delight in telling me about his girl friends. He didn't leave because of anything I had done; he just got restless again. The same thing happened two years ago.

• • • •

This is my problem: Should I hope that before the two years are up when I can get an absolute divorce, he may decide to try again, or should I get custody of my child and a limited divorce which will automatically become absolute at the end of two years? I am thanking you in advance for your kind advice. You don't know how much I need someone who can look at this question without being upset and worrying about the outcome. A. M. T.

• • • •

DEAR A. M. T.: If you can get a limited divorce and complete custody of the child, and if you are capable of supporting yourself and the child in such a manner as to provide the latter with a sense of social security, by all means have done with your husband at once. Nothing could have a worse effect on the child's psychological make-up than this atmosphere of constant turmoil hinging on his parents' upset relation with each other. It is far better for him that he see and associate with only one parent, no matter how simply he may have to live as a consequence of depending entirely upon that one parent for support and affection, than that he should be made the football of both parents' emotional clashes. And the time to act for the preservation of the child's mental and nervous health is now, not two years from now.

• • • •

Psychologists are divided in opinion as to just what is the formative period of a child's life. Some say the first two years; some say three; some say five, and some extend the period to the first seven years of his life. No doubt the child has grievously suffered already, but if he can be given peace and a sense of security from now henceforth, much of that damage can be repaired. The only way to give him the peace he must have, if he is to develop into a sane, well balanced individual capable of adjusting himself to the vicissitudes of existence, is to stop this seesawing back and forth with your husband, and settle matters once and for all.

• • • •

You admit the marriage has been a mistake; that your husband has deserted you before; that he refuses to give ear to your pleading now; that he boasts of his association with other women; and that your conduct has been blameless throughout. Now, if these are true facts, your husband has proved himself a broken reed to lean upon, and the sooner you stop looking to him for strength, guidance and succor, the sooner you will get your own and your child's life back on an even keel. Two years spent in waiting for him to make up his mind to return to you would be two years wasted, in my opinion. M. H.

• • • •

Son's Obscure Ailment.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a son 18 years old by my first husband, whom I divorced when the boy was 4. Until my son was 8 he lived alternately with his father's mother and with me. When he was 9 years old I married again and took him with me. He visits his grandmother and father when and as long as he pleases. His stepfather has always been kind to him, giving him a good home, and I have seen that he has had most things dear to a boy's heart. But he has never really had a father.

• • • •

About two years ago he told me he was worried, but didn't know what about. I have tried to get to the bottom of things for him, but only seem to make him worse. His blood has been tested and his tonsils removed. I have spoken to doctors about him. They tell me I have a problem, but don't tell me how to solve it.

• • • •

He doesn't sleep at night and he worries continuously about his health. Every scratch, every headache, every little pain can completely unnerve him, although he appears healthy enough. He is 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighs 145 pounds stripped, and loves fishing, hunting and riding. He is irritable, lazy and a complete sorehead. Something must be done. Please advise me. MOTHER.

• • • •

The Thing to Do.

DEAR MOTHER: Needless to say, I am no diagnostician and do not pose as such, but it seems clear that your son is suffering from an anxiety neurosis dating back, perhaps, to those early years of his life when he was bandied back and forth between two households, feeling himself an integral part of neither. When he was visiting one household, it is possible he heard the other and its personnel being held up to criticisms, condemnations and ridicule, so that he could never feel complete confidence in and dependence upon any of his mentors.

• • • •

If a child is to develop normally, he must make a continuous successive transfer of trust to persons whom he believes to be, and finds to be, completely trustworthy persons—whose wisdom, kindliness and strength are never for a moment questioned in his mind. As a rule he gives this trust first to his mother; or perhap to a nurse, and, finding that person in all ways dependable, he turns to the world with the same feeling of confidence. Lacking this sense of inner security, the child grows into the man with a troubling sense of anxiety for which he cannot account, and which, if not detected and righted, may develop into one of several forms of nervous or functional illness.

• • • •

My advice to you is to bring your son to the attention of a psychiatrist or diagnostician with a full understanding of the psychiatrist's approach to such obscure ailments as seems to be upsetting your son. If you do not know of such a practitioner, send me a stamped, addressed envelope, and I will give you the name of a man in whom you can place your confidence.

• • • •

Medical history is replete with cases showing the bad psychological effects of broken homes on the children of those homes. When a home is broken, it is best to make the break complete and final, so far as the children are concerned. It is best to give the children completely into the custody of one parent, conceding visiting privileges to the other parent, of course, but not shuttlecocking the children back and forth from one roof to another to assuage the parents' selfish emotion and vanity. M. H.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"I'VE JUST invested in a new sewing machine," said the lady across the street. "And I'm having the grandest time trying it out. On the wave of my enthusiasm I'm getting an awful lot of work done, incidentally.

"For one thing, I've about finished that extra bedroom I've been wanting to fix up as a guest room. You know it has white walls and that old blue rug that doesn't look like much, but has to be kept for the present. Well, I've bought dozens of yards of dotted swiss, white with red dots, which I'm making up into curtains, bedspread and dressing table skirt. You'll never guess what I've bought for trimming . . . old-fashioned embroidered beading that's rather wide. I'm going to run red ribbon through it and I think it will be just darling.

"But here's what I'd like you to help me with. The walls are painted white now, but I'm about decided to have them papered instead . . . in a design of white with red flowers in it. I'm having a pair of solid red boudoir chairs and an assortment of solid red cushions for the bed."

As a rule, we hesitate to suggest putting paper on over a good plastered wall, because if a lady changes her mind back again and wants the wall painted, it involves a certain amount of extra expense to put the wall in condition for paint once more. Besides, a painted wall doesn't need paper on it, so it seems that wall paper would be just an extra burden and expense. And yet paper certainly is pretty as can be, and for a room that needs pattern on the walls, nothing quite takes its place. So our advice to our neighbor was to go ahead if nothing else would make her happy!

Hogue Home Reflects Real Colonial Air

Mistress Has Decorated Place Without Help of Professionals.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE TAXICAB turns into a coach-and-four, clattering away over cobblestones, as you stand before the Georgian facade of Mrs. Richard Hogue's home at 125 Third street northeast.

Recently done over in keeping with the era it so charmingly represents, this house today reflects the intelligence and cultivated tastes of its mistress, who, without benefit of professional decorators, has captured a real colonial atmosphere by her choice and arrangement of furnishings.

You sense this the minute you approach the front door and pull the quaint knob that rings a clanging bell somewhere within. You half expect a frilled and furbelowed lady in a powdered wig and paisley shawl to ask you to enter. Instead, you are greeted by Mrs. Hogue herself, who invites you to go on a personally conducted tour of the house.

"Don't expect everything to match, either in wood, period or color," says Mrs Hogue by way of introduction "I am strong for individual pieces. I have furnished all eight rooms of this little house with pieces picked up here and there—at antique shops, junk shops, the Salvation Army headquarters, and farm houses. I have never gone out looking for any particular piece. I have simply 'happened across' it, knew I liked it and thought it was something I could use."

Two Open Fireplaces.

She explains this as we walk down a hall and into a double living room, in which the centers of interest are two open fireplaces suggesting cozy winter evenings before crackling logs and glowing embers. Antique lamps conveniently placed near winged chairs and book shelves built into the wall on either side of one fireplace attest the fact that this is a home of book lovers.

There is so much to see and admire in this room you would like to have enough time to exclaim over and examine each picture, each piece of furniture separately. You take time to rub your hand across the polished wood of a nest of tables, delicate in inlay, which Mrs. Hogue tells you she "picked up at a ridiculously low price." No piece in the whole house, she says, represents a big outlay of money.

Yet the light filtering through the windows at both ends of the living room brighten up many fine pieces—a maple low-boy here, an antique couch there, a tapestry-covered love-seat, a pine and maple desk, a Chippendale settee and low-swung, comfortable chairs with small tables conveniently near.

Front Part Gorgeous.

As we leave the living room and go back to the hall, Mrs. Hogue mentions that the front part of her house is Georgian, probably dating back to 1820, while the rooms at the back must have been built as early as 1770—judging from the early-colonial doorway at one side of the dining room. It is this spacious, rectangular room, incidentally, that many persons consider the most charming part of Mrs. Hogue's house.

White panelwood and small-patterned cream-colored paper decorate the walls. An open fireplace with an Adam mantel attracts your attention to one end of the room; a massive china cabinet that was doubtlessly once the pride of some good colonial dame stands at the other. The dining table, Mrs. Hogue tells us, it Dutch colonial and was once an old settle painted white. The eight chairs, which harmonize with each other but are not identical in style, are also Dutch colonial.

Every piece in this room, from the squat little serving table on one side of the room to the massive chest of drawers on the other, embodies the chaste proportions, neat turnings and sturdy lines characteristic of the rugged worth and stern necessity identified with our ancestors.

Upstairs, the colonial theme is also carried out in rooms rich with four-poster beds and candlewick spreads, Georgian chests and low-hung mirrors, improvised dressing tables and convenient chairs and desks. On the third floor, Mrs. Hogue has furnished what she calls "an overflow guest room" in modified Victorian style.

While she has not been slavish to any particular period, color scheme or wood in decorating her house, Mrs. Hogue has achieved a uniformity by the choice of her floor coverings and draperies. Hooked rugs are used in every room, and white shades with white dotted swiss curtains hang at every window.

The house as a whole represents collecting, discarding and planning over a decade-long period, Mrs. Hogue tells us. During that time, she has haunted antique shops, the American wing of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and early American houses wherever she could find them. She has read about antiques, talked about antiques and dreamed about them. And she has had the rare experience of finding some even lovelier than the ones she dreamed about. As a result of her extensive research on the subject and her experience in doing over her own house successfully, she has formulated some definite ideas about interior decorating that should be of interest to many women. Some of those she revealed yesterday are as follows:

1. "Unless you have plenty of money to spend on pieces you may throw away after your tastes have developed beyond them, don't rush into purchasing a number of pieces at once. Buy with 'prayer and fasting' so you won't have to live with mideous mistakes afterward."

2. "Unless you have plenty of time to weigh and consider every phase of doing over an interior, turn your problems over to a professional decorator."

3. "Don't try to buy everything to match. They didn't in the old days."

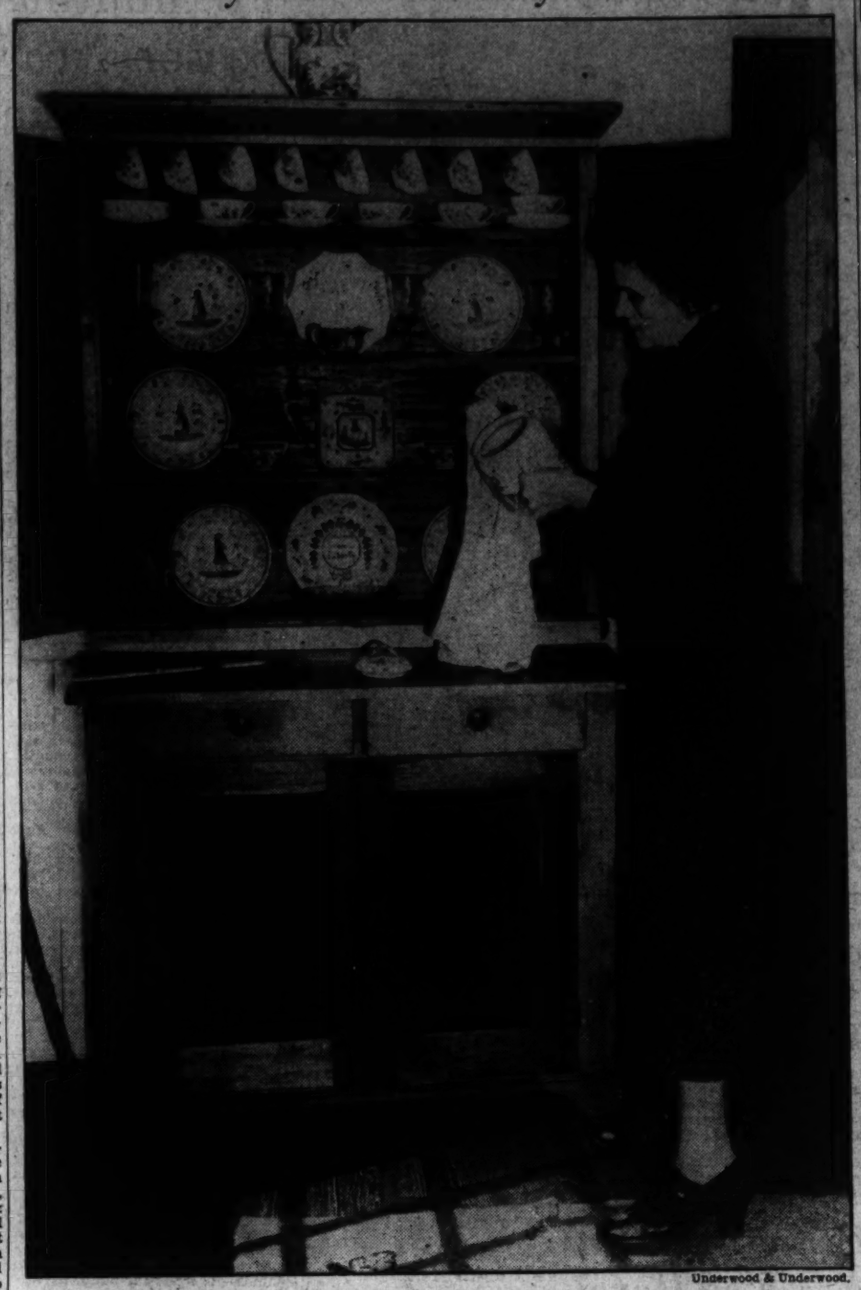
4. "By reading and inquiry, learn everything you can about furniture of the period you favor."

5. "Become a regular visitor to antique shops, junk shops and old houses. Make friends of the dealers; they can give you invaluable help"

6. "Be sure you can use each piece before you buy it."

Since Mrs. Hogue admits she has religiously followed these rules herself, it would seem they are good ones. Certainly her house in which "every piece of furniture has a story and no piece has been expensive" recaptures the charm of other days, when Capitol Hill was Washington's swankiest residential section.

Owner Surveys Cabinet in Early American Home



Underwood & Underwood.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Hidebound Skin.

We may think of the skin as a rather unimportant part of the body; as merely a covering for muscles, blood vessels, and nerves. This is not the true situation, inasmuch as this envelope of the body provides the avenue through which we get rid of an enormous amount of waste.

This very fact often leads to inflammation and diseases that are unsightly and frequently painful or annoying.

One of the most puzzling of all skin afflictions is known as scleroderma, a word meaning hardening of the skin. In fact the name "hidebound" fairly typifies the affair, which is characterized by the formation of thickened patches, some of which become pigmented, others blanched.

As a rule there are few symptoms, although neuralgia-like pains may be present. The first indication perceived by the patient is a sense of stiffness, that is, the skin will not feel as soft and pliable as it should. As the malady progresses the surface becomes tense and hard, with the appearance of considerable thickening.

Skin Becomes Tough.

In some cases atrophy (wasting) follows. The skin becomes tough and firmly adherent to the underlying structures. If the disease is on the face the lines of expression are destroyed so that it seems mask-like. Occasionally ulcerations occur over bony prominences. Fortunately some cases recover spontaneously or as the result of treatment, with little or no evidence of the original affection. Again, progress of the disease may cease, although the hard, firm condition may persist in certain areas.

Another type of scleroderma comes in rather small, firm, smooth patches, surrounded by a sort of violet-hued ring. They vary in size from that of a finger nail to the palm of the hand and may be irregular in shape. This phase is frequently called "white spot disease" or morphea, the lesions showing entire absence of color. Such plaques will be found usually on the chest, neck and shoulders.

Cause Undetermined.

The cause is not known definitely, although a few authors believe that it is due to lack of some internal secretion, while others suggest that it is of nervous origin, related to a disturbance of the sympathetic system. This latter theory is strengthened, inasmuch as the disorder is sometimes associated with Raynaud's disease.

Because in certain instances the malady has been benefited by the administration of thyroid extract many writers have felt that it is brought about by some deficiency in the secretion from this gland. There is also reason to believe that it may bear a definite relation to calcium metabolism, but speculate as we may, no proved source has been identified.

The chief objective in treatment is the maintenance of nutrition with an adequate vitamin intake. If the Wasserman is found to be positive, anti-syphilitic treatment should be used. Massage with a vegetable oil or cod liver oil is recommended, as is the employment of alternate hot and cold applications. This is done to aid circulation.

Rare in Children.

Although rare in children, a few hundred cases have been reported. With infants, the disease is seldom enduring and the majority of lesions clear up without disability. In youngsters, the outlook is better than with adults. No one has been able to explain why the process may stop suddenly at any time. The skin will then soften and regain its normal color.

A recent case is reported of a 5-year-old who complained a few months ago of numerous areas of calloused skin, each paler than normal. The fingers were so involved that movement was interfered with and slight atrophy of the entire arm was observed. Later the leathery feel increased, with accompanying hardening. No special treatment was adopted other than to make certain that nutrition was well above normal. While recovery is not complete at this time, many of the spots have disappeared.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

THE COMING theatrical season may not be the best that Broadway has ever nourished in its buzzim, but in one respect, at least, it is going to be the most unusual in several years. Almost a dozen of our best known friends of the movies, their pockets and handbags stuffed with nice fresh film money, are coming back East for another whirl at the stage.

ALICE HUGHES.

Kate the Great Hepburn, pride of Hartford, will bring us her freckles and her dynamic talents in "Jane Eyre" for the Theater Guild. Frederic March and his spouse, Florence Eldridge, are scouting for a good play. Margaret Sullavan is another homecomer. Kitty Carlisle will be seen in the colossal, stupendous, etc. "White Horse Inn," which has been running in London practically since the Restoration. Edward G. Robinson and Miriam Hopkins are shopping for scripts and of course we shall have the Hamlets of Leslie Howard and the current London Wonder Boy, John Gielgud—with Lillian Gish as the punch-drunk Ophelia of the affair.

Bless their little hearts! They're all broken out with a rash of wealth, and now they cast longing eyes at the flesh-and-blood theater! Freddy March collects no less than $125,000 every time he faces a camera—but he and all the rest of these good troupers love the feel and the smell of the true theater—its crowds and their applause. Welcome home, kids—we're glad to mitt you.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN — Tip-off on the Broadway of 1936. Pushing and shoving my ladylike way up the bright street the other evening, in the crowd of electric-sign-gapers, I saw with surprise and delight the magic and famous name of "Rector's" above a restaurant, bringing second-hand memories of the Mauve Decade and its gastronomic glories. P. S. It turned out to be a help-yourself-beanery! . . .

Add second-generations in Times Square. In the 1919 "Follies" the lovely "Eden Girl" was played by Patricia Princess, toast and boast of the town. In the current '36 "Follies," Shubert style, one of the pretties Ladies of the Ensemble is her daughter, 17-year-old Hiawanna Booth—and did Mama beam at the premiere! . . .

One of the interesting characters around the village is Uncle Robert, who has just had his seventy-third birthday, and whose chief interest in life at present is to keep kids on the sidewalk and out of the way of our careening taxis. He goes cheerily about broadcasting his slogan, "S O S." or Stay on Sidewalks. It's a good stunt and slogan for everywhere, it seems to me . . .

Ursula Parrott, the popular novelist, turned up for luncheon at "Our 21" the other day and startled the ringsiders by bringing her husband, Jack Wildman. Age withers not, nor does custom stale, the infinite variety of Ursula, whom we called "Kitty" when she and I shared an apartment decade ago. That was when she was still writing fashion advertising, as I was, and before she started her first fiction smash, "Ex-Wife." In those days Kitty had two grand passions—shoes and shower-baths. For all I know, she still has 'em . . .

Now that the R-months are among us, old-time oyster-fanciers are going around demolishing the legends that cluster about the luscious bivalve.

For instance, they stop total strangers on Madison avenue and heatedly deny that oysters (or eraters, as they really do say over the river in Brooklyn) and ice cream are deadly enemies. The oyster-lovers say that they get along just dandy. Another canard they love to scotch is the fable that oysters will knock you dead in the summer months. They say you just won't like them, as they are either stringy or else full of spawn and flat to the palate.

On the constructive side they shout happily that oysters are simply jammed to the gunwales with dear old vitamins A, B, C and D, if that means much to you. I must confess it doesn't to me. I merely love dunking a Sea Tag in a spot of cocktail sauce, and then snapping at it. I'm just an old-timer of the pre-vitamin school, I'm afraid.

Early Grouch Is Not Habit Of Childhood

If Parents Overcome Fault, Children Will Follow Example.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ONE of the commonest forms of bad temper is the before-breakfast grouch. It is an unsocial and unnecessary habit, a form of self-indulgence, and usually dates back to childhood.

Some people insist that it is a hereditary trait. All the Blanks are unpleasant until they have had their coffee. Sam is like his father and grandfather. But long before Sam had the coffee habit he had developed the early morning grouch, simply because he had imitated his father who had imitated his father, who in turn had imitated his.

Another man will insist that his digestion is to blame. He should see a doctor and have his digestion attended to. Of course, it will be hard to convince the doctor that there is anything wrong, if the only symptom is early morning grouch. Somehow a stomach which is soothed by nothing more than a cup of coffee does not really seem very seriously at fault. Perhaps a psychologist would do the sufferer more good, and the psychologist would probably find that the man's complaint was due to a hang-over from childhood.

Parents who wake up cross and fault-finding, or morose and taciturn, can expect nothing better from their children. The breakfast-table in such a household is bound to be an unpleasant place, and as the children go out and set up homes of their own, the atmosphere of breakfast-table gloom is passed on from generation to generation. If one household would, by self-control and good temper, break the charmed succession, many future households would escape the curse.

As a general thing the succession to the grouch runs in the male line. It is the boys of the family, therefore, who most often need the guidance of good example, and it is the fathers who must give it.

Feminine China Ordered to Drop American Ways

PEIPING, China (AP).—Feminine China, which was fast adopting American styles and ultra-modern dress, has been ordered by Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, head of the "New Life Movement," which aims at the regeneration of the Chinese people, to return to the simples dress worn by China's grandmothers.

In future, according to China's dictator-reformer, whose wife, May Ling, was educated at Wellesley College, Chinese women and girls must wear garments covering the entire body. Even the arms and ankles must be covered.

The new "Ten Commandments" which the National Government says must be followed under pain of punishment, forbids women and girls these customs and clothes:

1. Tight, figure-conforming dresses showing the breasts and hips.
2. Thin dresses, showing part of the breast and arms.
3. Coats permitting undue exposure.
4. Clothes not covering the knees. (Women engaged in hard labor not included.)
5. Short coats not coming below the hips.
6. Gowns with slits reaching as high as the knees.
7. Sleeves not covering the armpits.
8. Foot-binding. (But this shall not include women above 30.)
9. Underwear, nightgowns or pajamas for street wear.
10. Breast or waist-binding and the wearing of corsets.

Lady Mendl Hired For Palace Work

London, Sept. 18.—Lady Mendl (nee Elsie de Wolfe) has been selected by King Edward to supervise redecoration of Buckingham Palace.

It was Lady Mendl, the American-born wife of Sir Charles Mendl, of the British Embassy at Paris, who recently directed the decoration of new rooms added to the King's country home, Frot Belvedere.

Daytime Dresses.

Paris (U.P.).—Daytime dresses frequently are in two different kinds of material—wool combined with satin, striped silk or with velvet. The most important part of the day dresses are the broadened shoulders and sleeves which are full from the elbow to the shoulder.

Budget to Dress Smartly

A SMART new fall outfit, thanks to her budget! That's why Connie is the envy of all the girls.

Poor Edith in faded summer clothes!

Edith's purse is flat because she bought those pale green slippers she didn't need and that cute evening bag, though she already had a pretty one. She can't seem to spread her money out where it's needed.

Connie doesn't cheat herself that way. She set aside a certain part of her income for rent, another part for food, running expenses for the house, advancement, clothes, and so on. She always knows just where she stands. If she'd rather have simpler meals and pay for new gloves or a smart purse, she plans that way.

She doesn't buy a new dress frantically just before the party. With cash already saved, she can profit by sales.

She knows that simple clothes are always smart and stay in style longer than extreme ones. She builds each season's wardrobe around one or two colors; buys dresses and accessories that harmonize with these.

Her budget takes care of things like dental bills. She doesn't let her teeth get in a sad state for lack of cash, then have a huge bill to pay.

Expert Answers Requests For Fruit Preserve Recipes

Citron, Pear, Tomato and Paradise Jelly Suggestions Offered; All Gift Glasses Should Be Labeled.

By Dorothea Duncan.

RECIPE REQUESTS FOR FRUIT preserves are still finding their way into this office. Many of the requests are for some of the more unusual types of fruit. Yesterday, for example, a woman called to ask how to preserve citron melon. A friend of hers had sent a melon to her with the casual comment that it could be preserved.

Generous friends from the country frequently, at this time of year, make gifts of home-grown fruits to their city neighbors, and often the supply is so generous that some of it must be preserved lest it go to waste before it can be eaten.

The woman who has already completely stocked her pantry shelves with preserved fruit for the winter may not want to make any more jelly or jam for her own use. In this case, the extra fruit may be preserved and packed in small fancy jars to be given away at Christmas time. The actual cost of the contents of the jars may be but a few cents, but to persons who never have any home-preserved fruit they will be worth their weight in gold. The preserve jars may be specially purchased fruit juice glasses or tumblers with gay stripes if you want to make your jelly packages into gifts that will have some value after the contents are eaten.

The gift glasses should be labeled with special care. Plain white paper labels on which the name of the jelly is typewritten may be used. These will be especially effective at Christmas time if they are stuck to the glasses with Christmas seals. Perhaps it is too early to buy seals, but in most homes there will be few seals left over from last holiday season.

The gift jars should be stored in a cool dry place. Dust them off carefully before sending them away, wrap them in white or colorless transparent paper and pack them in bright gift boxes.

Citron Preserves.

Peel and remove the seeds from a 6-pound citron melon. Dice it, or cut it into thin slices. To eight cups of sliced melon allow five cups of sugar and four cups of water. Boil sugar and water for six minutes, add the citron and cook until it is tender and transparent. Test melon for tenderness with a straw. Add the rind of one lemon and the juice of one lemon and six cloves (optional) without heads. Cook the preserves 20 minutes longer. Add three tablespoons chopped candied ginger. Place the preserves in sterilized jars and seal.

Pickled Citron.

6 pounds citron
2 pounds sugar
1 pint vinegar
1 pint water
1 lemon
1 tablespoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon cloves
1 teaspoon allspice

Pare the citrons, and cut in medium thin slices. Soak over night in salt water (two tablespoons salt to one quart water). Drain off the brine and cook the citron in clear water until it is tender. Add the citron to the hot pickling solution made from the vinegar, sugar and spices, and boil it rapidly until it becomes clear. Seal in clean, hot jars.

Ginger Pears.

5 pounds hard pears
3 cups water
5 pounds sugar
½ cup preserved ginger
3 lemons, juice and grated rind

Remove the skin and cores from the pears and cut the fruit in slices lengthwise. Add the water and cook until the pears are tender. Add the sugar, juice and grated rind of the lemons, the ginger cut in small pieces, and simmer the mixture until it is thick. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal.

Tomato Preserves.

Scald and skin 1 pound red tomatoes. Slice. Cover the tomatoes with an equal amount of sugar. Permit them to stand for 12 hours. Put them through a strainer (optional). Boil mixture until it falls from a spoon in heavy drops. Add the grated rind of 1 lemon, the juice of 1 lemon and 2 ounces of ginger root or preserved ginger. Four inches of stick cinnamon may be substituted for the ginger. Cook the preserves until they are thick. Pack in clean, hot jars and seal.

If green tomatoes are used they need not be peeled. Slice them. Cover them with sugar. Boil them until they are heavy, flavor them in the same way. Cook them until they are thick.

Paradise Jelly.

Wash and cut into quarters 20 medium-sized apples. Peel and cut into quarters 10 medium-sized quinces. Remove the seeds. Place the apples in a pan with 1 quart cranberries. Barely cover with water. Boil them until they are soft. Cover the quinces with water. Boil them until they are soft. Strain the juices of all the fruits through a jelly bag. Boil juices for 12 minutes. Allow 1 cup of sugar to each cup of juice. Cook only 4 cups of juice at one time for best results. Cook only long enough to obtain the jelly test.

Roquefort Cheese Tasty in Omelet

A spread of Roquefort cheese lends distinction to an omelet and makes it an ideal dish for the September Sunday evening supper.

To prepare the omelet: Beat 6 egg whites until foamy. Add a few grains of salt and continue beating until stiff, but not dry. Beat 6 egg yolks until thick and lemon colored. Add ½ teaspoon salt and 6 tablespoons evaporated milk. Fold yolk mixture carefully into beaten whites. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a deep frying pan or omelet pan. When bubbling turn in omelet mixture. Cook over low flame until omelet is puffed and the bottom and sides are a golden brown. Set in a moderate oven or under a low broiling flame to dry top. If frying pan is used, score omelet across center with a knife.

To serve: Spread half the omelet with one portion of Roquefort cheese that has been mashed and softened with 2 tablespoons evaporated milk. Slide half omelet on hot plate. Fold over the other half and press gently until it stays in place. Garnish with parsley or watercress and ripe olives. Serves six.

Good Toast Hint.

A loaf of French bread or Vienna rolls, cut in half lengthwise and then toasted, is the beginning of savory toast to serve with vegetable salads or seafoods. After cutting in half lengthwise, the loaf is sliced at inch intervals, almost through to the bottom crust, so that portions may easily be broken off. While hot, the toast is buttered generously with butter which has been creamed in a bowl that was first rubbed with garlic. Savory toast is delicious with fish of any kind, or with combination vegetable salads.

Tomato Topic Of Next Week's Recipe Contest

TOMATOES are such a popular fruit that while they are still plentiful and seasonal they should merit special attention by the housewife. For this reason tomato recipes have been chosen as the theme of The Post recipe contest for next week.

All Post food page readers are invited to enter the contest by sending their favorite method of preparing tomatoes to Dorothea Duncan in care of The Washington Post. Recipes for canned tomatoes—tomato preserves, pickle, etc.—may be included as well as recipes for baked tomatoes, fried tomatoes and the like.

Cash awards will be offered for the five best recipes submitted. The first prize is $5, the second $3, and the three remaining prizes $1 each.

Only recipes that are typed or neatly written in ink will be considered for an award. It is requested that each contestant submit but one recipe.

Be sure to mail your entry in time to reach this office not later than next Saturday morning.

Food Subdividing.

Subdividing goes on, in foods as in real estate. Butter in quarter-pound packages has been available for some time. Now comes the announcement that one firm has cut the quarter-pound stick into ten individual pats, separated from each other by parchment arranged in accordion-pleated fashion.

Serve Halibut Mold With Creamy Egg Sauce

Ground, raw halibut or other flaky, white fish makes an appealing and nourishing dish when combined with bread crumbs, cream, seasonings and egg whites, molded and baked in the oven and served with creamy egg sauce.

Fish Always Is Popular Food On Washington Dinner Tables

Post Expert Offers Several Suggestions for Seafood Dishes; Molded Halibut Makes Appetizing Dish.

FISH IS SERVED frequently in Washington throughout the week as well as on Friday because a supply of fresh seafood is always available in the markets any day in the week.

White fish is perhaps the most popular and is usually served fried in butter, or dipped in milk and cracker or bread crumbs, seasoned, covered with melted butter and baked in a moderate oven until done. There are times, however, when fish will be appreciated served in an unusual manner, such as a hot fish loaf. Because most white fish contain little fat, it is therefore improved by cooking with butter or other fat or serving with a rich cream or butter sauce.

White fish flakes in their most festive form are those that have been molded into a fish loaf which is served with a creamy egg sauce. This is an ideal fish course for a company as well as family dinner and will be appreciated on Monday or Saturday as well as on Friday. Serve the fish loaf with a generous dish or buttered green beans, crisp salad greens with your favorite dressing, pineapple sherbet and frosted cup cakes.

For serving a family of eight use the following recipe:

Molded Halibut With Creamy Egg Sauce.

1 pound uncooked halibut
1 pint white bread crumbs
1 cup sweet cream
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons grated onion
2 tablespoons butter
4 egg whites.

Grind the uncooked halibut very fine. Cook white bread crumbs with a cup of cream to smooth paste. Add to fish with seasonings and butter. Beat egg whites until stiff and fold into fish mixture. Turn the mixture into well-buttered baking dish or mold. Place in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F., for 45 minutes, or until lightly browned.

Turn out on a large platter, garnish with slices of lemon and parsley and serve with lemon butter or a cream sauce with slices of hard cooked eggs in it.

Creamy Egg Sauce.

3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk
⅛ teaspoon pepper
4 eggs, hard cooked

Melt butter in top of double boiler and stir in flour. Add hot milk gradually and cook, stirring until sauce thickens to prevent lumps. Add seasoning. Add hard cooked eggs, sliced lengthwise, shortly before serving.

Lemon Butter Sauce.

Molded halibut is delicious sliced and served with lemon butter sauce. To make it use:

½ cup butter
Juice of 1 lemon
3 tablespoons chopped parsley

Dietrich Causes Near Riot in Paris

Paris (U.P.).—Marlene Dietrich almost caused a riot when she set out to buy a new winter wardrobe in Paris. Her low-slung, long limousine was easily recognized and it was necessary to call out special police forces to protect the film star from autograph seekers and crowds of curious.

Fom Schiaparelli, Marlene ordered several black cocktail dresses. One in sheer wool has a brief little jacket that is completely embroidered in gold thread in a palm tree design.

Another cocktail outfit, in heavy black cloque material, is coposed of a long-skirted dress that is closely fitted in the body. The bodice is severe, with an extremely high neckline and the dress is worn with a tailored and fitted jacket of the same black cloque.

Holds Pretzel Edge.

Pennsylvania may rightly lay claim to being the pretzel State. In 1933, Pennsylvania bakeries produced 49,000,000 pounds of pretzels, valued at $7,000,000. That quantity represents 65 per cent of all the pretzels baked in the United States.

Trugs Are Handy For Hot Breads

Trugs are baskets whose shape was inspired by an old English measure for wheat. The measure, called a trug, was about two-thirds of our bushel. But a young man named Thomas Smith made a variety of baskets, calling them all trugs. He used willow splits, which not only permitted him to shape the baskets gracefully, but which gave the finished basket lightness and strength.

Nearly a century ago young Thomas Smith delivered some of his trugs to that practical person, Queen Victoria. Today, one of the descendants of that same Thomas Smith still makes them.

The word trug is probably a corruption of trough, for the old wheat measure was trough-shaped. Appropriately enough, it is these trough or cucumber shaped trugs which are especially attractive for serving breads. The small ones are excellent for hot breads.

"ALL-BRAN KEEPS ME IN SHAPE EVERY DAY"

"When I had eaten a heavy breakfast, I would feel logy. After a couple of days of this, I would have to take a laxative.

"One morning I had a dish of ALL-BRAN. Believe me, it beats any laxative, as it keeps me in shape every day."—Wm. C. Billings, 1330 19th St., Denver, Colorado.

Scientific tests prove this natural food is both safe and effective—worlds better than taking patent medicines. ALL-BRAN is guaranteed. Take it a week. If not satisfactory, your money will be refunded by the Kellogg Company.

Serve as a cereal or use in cooking. ALL-BRAN also supplies vitamin B and iron. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Compass

A "smaller, cheaper and more reliable" aviation compass has been invented by Dr. Ross Gunn, of the Naval Research Laboratory. Where the present compasses read "off" for from 10 to 15 seconds after the airplane hits a bump, Dr. Gunn's new compass rights itself after a second or two.

A former Army flier, Dr. Gunn has been working with aviation compasses at the laboratory for ten years. He has received half a dozen patents on compass improvements and his latest is the best of the lot. However, he still isn't satisfied and next year probably will find him with another compass invention.

Women Microbe Hunter

Of the 45 medical officers on the staff of the National Institute of Health, the experimental unit of the Public Health Service, more than one-third, or 17, are women.

Most famous of the group is Dr. Alice Evans who identified the bacteria causing abortions in cows with that causing undulant fever in man and gave scientists the world over the means of combatting a disease that had baffled them for generations. While at work on her discovery, Dr. Evans contracted undulant fever. Although her health has been poor ever since she still carries on at the laboratory.

Other women on the staff and the studies they are making now are Dr. Eloise B. Cram and Myrna F. Jones, diseases caused by parasites; Alice T. Merrill and Edna M. Montgomery, sugar chemistry in relation to health and disease; Mildred Adams and Mary E. Maver, enzymes.

Dr. Ida A. Bengtson, senior bacteriologist, and who with the assistance of Sarah E. Stewart, standardized the gas gangrene anti-toxin, is now working on endemic typhus and spotted fever. Dr. Sara E. Branham is trying to improve the anti-meningitis serum while Elizabeth Verder is working with streptococci germs.

Mabelle O. Nolan is studying intestinal diseases caused by worm parasites and Dr. Mary E. Reid, the possible effects on health that may be used by plants absorbing certain chemicals in the soil. This latter study, we have heard, may cause vast political repercussions.

Committee meetings will be held Tuesday morning. During the afternoon delegates will pay a visit to Mount Vernon and to Arlington National Cemetery. At 8:30 p. m. Tuesday there will be a reception at the Mayflower in honor of Commander Nelson and his staff.

The first business session of the entire encampment will be held at the Mayflower after the parade Wednesday. That night there will be a "campfire" meeting at the Government auditorium.

Hearing Held Here On New Smoke Act

A public hearing on proposed regulations drafted under the new smoke law was held yesterday by Capt. Patrick H. Tansey, assistant engineer commissioner. Only minor modifications were suggested.

Representatives of fuel concerns, fuel equipment manufacturers, the Board of Trade, and realty organizations together with almost a score of engineers were present.

The new regulations will be submitted to the Commissioners for adoption by a committee headed by Capt. Tansey after being modified and clarified.

Skinner to Head Utilities Drive For Red Cross

U. S. Commerce Chamber Aid Named by Wilson; Key Men Picked.

David A Skinner, secretary of the United States Chamber of Commerce, will head Red Cross membership solicitation in local public utilities, it was announced last night by Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. and chairman of the campaign.

Skinner's appointment was the third in the city-wide Red Cross roll call organization. Others named by Chairman Wilson were Robert V. Fleming, who will supervise the canvass in District financial circles, and Gen. Fred Boschen, who will head the Federal and District government division.

Skinner, who has been affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce since its creation in 1912, was chairman of membership solicitation in the general business group for the roll call during the campaign last year. For the four years previous he served as a member of the roll call committee.

First serving the Government with the American administration in Puerto Rico in 1898, Skinner was made special agent of the United States Census Bureau on the Caribbean island. In 1911 he became assistant chief of the United States Bureau of Manufacturers, a forerunner of the present Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Was Chamber Secretary.

After a year in the service of the Commerce Department, he was made secretary of the Chamber of Commerce when it was organized.

Wilson yesterday announced that Mrs. Ernest J. Smith, wife of the vice chairman in charge of insular and foreign operations, American Red Cross, will have charge of volunteers working at headquarters.

Mrs. Swift, Miss Minnie Harman, representatives of the American Red Cross, and Miss Edna L. May, were made administrators of the headquarters office.

Simultaneously, Wilson announced that Charles H. Doing, jr., president of the West End Branch of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., will supervise all auditing and financial activities in connection with the campaign.

Among the score of volunteer workers who will aid in the campaign will be Mlle. Marie-Therese de Laboulaye, daughter of the French Ambassador; Barbara Barnes, Mrs. Erskine Hamilton, Mrs. R. V. Garden, chairman of the motor corps; Mrs. Fannie Ingram, vice chairman of the motor corps; Helen Beattie, Anne Claude and Nancy Brerton, Red Cross health aids, who will operate the office switchboard and supervise the information booths.

Key Men in Group.

Following is the list of key men in Skinner's group:

G. M. Campbell, assistant general freight agent, freight depot, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad; A. J. McCarthy, chief clerk, passenger depot, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad; H. W. Large, district freight agent, freight depot, Pennsylvania Railroad; Alan B. Smith, general passenger agent, passenger depot, Pennsylvania Railroad; C. S. Bragg, chief clerk, Chesapeake & Ohio Lines; C. D. Mackay, assistant vice president, Southern Railway; J. J. Chunta, chief clerk, the Pullman Co.; L. S. Walker, general passenger agent, Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co.

H. D. Ford, American Airlines, Inc.; Elmer Cross, Eastern Air Lines.

Leon Brill, Bell Cab Co.; Earl Kline, City Cab Association; H. C. David president, Diamond Cab Co.; W. L. Bush, Blue and Gray Sightseeing Co.; J. H. Stephens, vice president, Capital Transit Co.

G. L. Hightman, secretary, Railroad Y. M. C. A., Washington Terminal Co.; D. P. Aub, American Express Co.; C. W. Turner, agent, Railway Express Agency; G. F. Royston, assistant, Southeastern Express Co.

C. M. Shrape, executive assistant, Potomac Electric Power Co. Charles A. Robinson, general manager, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; Edward T. Stafford, secretary, Washington Gas Light Co.; Harry I. Gilbert, assistant superintent, Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.; F. C. Poli, president, Commercial Association, Western Union Telegraph Co., and Clarence Limerick, president, Traffic Association, Western Union Telegraph Co.

Amateur Floriculturist Raises Bananas in Front Yard Here

Howard Lloyd, of Broad Branch Road, Simply Indulges Hobby, Has No Profit Motive and Can't Eat Fruit Because It Doesn't Mature.

It must be true what they say about Washington's tropical climate. Howard Lloyd, of 6107 Broad Branch road northwest, has bananas growing in his front yard.

Lloyd is a former insurance man who has been experimenting with floriculture since he retired from business. He's been growing bananas now for six or seven years. So far as he knows, they are the only ones grown outdoors north of Florida.

There's no profit incentive in Lloyd's banana growing. He does it just to accept the challenge to grow something where nature didn't intend it to grow.

As a matter of fact, the Lloyd family doesn't even eat the bananas after they're grown. It seems that the season is too short here to permit the fruit to mature fully enough to become edible. About the time that the bananas really ripen, a frost comes along and Lloyd has to take the stalks in for the winter.

He has eight or ten stalks in his garden now. Only one of these is producing bananas, though. That particular stalk has one bunch, already about half formed.

Bananas are just like apples and peaches. They start out in life as blossoms. The blossoms are protected by long, purple-colored leaves which curl back successively, starting from the top of the stalk, to reveal the flowers beneath.

Yesterday there were about 40 bananas of varying sizes at the top of the stalk. Beneath them were blossoms and beneath the blossoms were the tightly-curled purple leaves that house the embryo fruit.

By the end of November, when the local banana season closes, Lloyd estimates that this stalk will have borne about 150 specimens of the fruit.

When the frost comes he'll dig up the stalks and store them in his cellar for the winter. They lie dormant, then, he says, and need only a little dirt around their roots to keep them alive. Having to keep them in the cellar is a handicap, though, because the stalks have to be thrown away when they get too big. Only the younger ones can be kept.

As a formula for successful banana-raising in Washington, Mr. Lloyd recommends painstaking care, plenty of water and rich soil. For some reason, he says, stalks that he has given to his friends haven't done so well.

Officers Deny Ousted Lodges Joined N.A.F.E.

Five Former A.F.G.E. Units to Continue Allegiance, They Declare.

Affiliation with the newly formed National Association of Federal Employes was denied last night by officers of both the five progressives lodges ousted from the American Federation of Government Employes and the liberal lodges still in the federation.

Arthur Stein, president of the WPA lodge, denied reports that the lodge had anything to do with the formation of the organization of noncivil service workers being sponsored by John Arthur Shaw, former president of the A. F. G. E.

"We are in the A. F. G. E. and intend to remain," said Stein. "We gave our pledge at Detroit that we would not quit and we have nothing at all to do with this other organization."

From the officers of the ousted lodges it was learned that none of the lodges have taken any part in the formation of the new organization of Federal employes.

The general attitude of most of these lodges has been to maintain their organizations intact and to await the results of the investigation that is to be conducted by the A. F. G. E. and the American Federation of Labor.

5-Orphans' Fund Of Post Now $101

Proposed several days ago by Mrs. Gertrude Trowbridge, of the Dodge Hotel, contributions to the fund will go to Mrs. Irene Corley, grandmother of five children orphaned by the death of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Tompkinson, 1301 Fourth street southwest, in an auto crash near Fredericksburg, Va., last week.

Mrs. Corley, burdened with care of the orphaned youngsters, said she would take them to her small farm in Mount Holly, N. C. The father left no money and when the children's plight was revealed in Post stories, Washingtonians rallied to their aid.

Yesterday's contributions came from:

K. G. M.	$10.00
Hattie M. Strong	30.00
A. D. Ashburn	10.00
Anonymous	.50
Miss J. C. Farrington	1.00
Mrs. Preterre Murray	5.00
Yesterday's contributions	$56.50

Agriculture Orchestra To Give Concert Again

In response to many requests the Department of Agriculture Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Walter Bauer, will repeat the concert given on September 15. The hall on that occasion was filled to capacity, and the favorable comment in the newspapers has brought forth a surprisingly large number of inquiries as to the possibility of a second performance.

The repeat performance, free to the public, will take place on Wednesday night, September 23, at 8:30 in the auditorium of the south building, Fourteenth street and Independence avenue. The program consists of Borodin's second symphony in B minor, the "Andante Cantabile" from Chaikovski's string quartet in D; Musorgski's "A Night on Bald Mountain" and "Gopak," Lyadov's "Music Box," and Rimski-Korsakov's "Legend of Tsar Saltan."

234 Seeking D. C. Refuge Work Study

Many Have Been on the List for Years; Wait Chance to Learn.

Father Applies for Place for Mentally Defective Girl of 10.

The fourth in a series of articles on the District Training School at Laurel, Md. Lack of funds is seriously hampering the institution's work in training the city's mental defectives.

There are now 234 persons on the waiting list for admission to the District Training School. Some of them have been on the list for years, waiting for a chance for the training that alone can make them able to meet life.

The cards in the office of Mrs. R. R. Miller, head of the child welfare division of the Board of Public Welfare, tell only the bare facts about those waiting for admission. But behind those facts are stories that reflect the dire necessity for expanding the scope of the institution.

Mrs. Miller related how the other day a middle-aged man walked into her office. He was out of work, she said, and apparently on the verge of starvation.

Girl Helpless.

The man asked Mr. Miller if there were a place at the institution for his child, a girl of 10. The girl was mentally defective, he said, and utterly helpless. For 10 years, he related, his wife had managed to care for the child. But the wife became ill and now is an absolute invalid. And he cannot afford the expensive nursing service that would be necessary to take care of the girl.

But because the District Training School is already loaded to capacity nothing can be done about even such a case as this.

Then there is the story of a girl of 16. She was put on the list several years ago. Had she been sent to the school, she would, with training, have equipped herself for a job in the world. But, because there is no room, she is still "on the list." In a few years, says Mrs. Miller, she will in all probability end on the dockets of the police courts.

Another case in Mrs. Miller's files illustrates the false economy of scrimping on school expenses.

A few years ago a girl of 20 was recommended to be sent to the institution. There was no room for her then. There has been none since.

But during the years that the girl has been on the list she has borne five illegitimate children. Welfare investigators calling at her home took them from her because she was mentally unable to care for them.

Those children are now being reared at District expense. And the District is paying just five times the amount it would have piad had the girl been committed to the training school years ago.

Until Congress realizes the necessity of expanding the training school facilities the District will continue to pay for such false economies. They will pay for the cost of crime, of illegitimacy and of relief work.

Jewish Veterans To Meet Monday

Washington Post, No. 58, Jewish War Veterans, will hold a special meeting Monday at 8 p. m. at the Jewish Community Center to consider a resolution urging a militant fight against "the ever-increasing manifestation of anti-Americanism and anti-Semitism in this country."

First efforts, it was said, will be directed against the Rev. Gerald Smith, James True, America First, Inc.; Anti-Semitic Knights of the White Camellia, the American Coalition and the Black Legion.

The post issued an invitation to all veterans and members of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, Military Order of the Purple Heart, United Spanish War Veterans and other veterans organizations.

Oompah on Tuba Starts Knife Fray; D. C. Youth Jailed

You can push the middle valve down, but don't do it when Henry McCarthy, 21, colored, 1018 First street northwest, is around. Because if you do, trouble is sure to start.

Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt yesterday sent McCarthy to jail for 90 days on acharge of assault. McCarthy didn't like the music emanating from a three-piece colored band—especially the tuba, played by James Kennedy, 114 Pierce court northwest.

According to witnesses McCarthy went into a yard at 1118 First street northwest and upbraided Kennedy for the way he played. Then he drew a knife and attempted to cut him.

McCarthy was overpowered by Andrew Tillman, who lives with Kennedy, and Judge Brandon, 217 F street northwest, the other musicians.

P.-T.A. Charts Drive on Perils To Democracy

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 18.—A Nation-wide attack on "the perils to democracy such as have risen in Europe" was outlined today by the Executive Board of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

The board voted to have its 25,000 units throughout the country undertake studies in democracy this winter to further "constant promotion of democratic ideals" and "to increase understanding of economic conditions and problems."

The action had no political significance, the board emphasized.

The decision followed the report of Mrs. Mary Bannerman, of Washington, legislative chairman, who said the Eastern Hemisphere has been aligned into two opposing camps, neither embracing democracy, as a result of ignorance of what democracy means.

"Democracy, everywhere on the defensive, may be saved in the Western Hemisphere only by a widespread understanding of its principles and practices," Mrs. Bannerman said.

Mrs. A. H. Reeve, of Philadelphia, international relations chairman, urged a program to increase understanding of economic interracial and international problems.

D. C. Branch Host To Naval Society

Members of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, who have been holding an international convention in New York City, were guests at a dinner here last night given at the Mayflower Hotel by the District branch of the society.

The delegates inspected the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis yesterday before coming to the Capital. They will be taken on a tour of Government buildings and other points of interest today, and one group of engineers will inspect the model testing basin at the Navy Yard.

Among the distinguished marine engineers from other countries who attended the dinner last night were: The Right Honorable Lord Stonehaven, president of the Institution of Naval Architects; Rear Admiral J. Hope Harrison, retired, and Capt. F. P. Bradley, both of the Royal British Navy; Rear Admiral Rolland Boris and Capt. Louis Sable, of the French Navy; Admiral Robert Witthoeft, of the German Navy; Capt. U. Cugia, of the Royal Italian Navy; Dr. Masawo Kamo, of the Society of Naval Architects of Japan; Don Pedro de la Rosa, of the Spanish Association of Naval Engineers, and Rolf A. F. Sandberg, of Svenska Teknologforeningen, Sweden.

Approximately 200 guests attended the dinner.

Parking Lots Must Obtain D. C. Permits

Nov. 1 Deadline Set by Commissioners on New Regulation.

Law Provides for Police Inspection of Autos; Penalties Listed.

All commercial parking lots and garages will be placed under police regulation and be required to obtain licenses before November 1 under an order adopted yesterday by the District Commissioners.

Adopting a report submitted by a licensing committee, the Commissioners set up a scale of license fees ranging from $10 to $35, depending upon the size of the area devoted to parking of motor vehicles. For spaces 4,000 square feet or less, the license fee is $10; from 4,000 to 10,000 square feet, $15, and in excess of 10,000 square feet, $25.

Regulations to be enforced will authorize police to inspect parking lots and the records of parked cars during business hours.

Specific provision will be provided that any licensed owner or manager of a garage or lot who violates any regulation or who makes a practice of parking vehicles on public space after accepting them on his lot shall have his license suspended or revoked.

The order is based upon the authority granted the Commissioners by the license law of 1932. It was recommended by a committee headed by Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel.

The basis of the license fee, it was explained, is the municipal inspection of the garage and parking lots by various District agencies. The fees are not intended to raise additional municipal revenue.

Gas Deal Hearing Set for Sept. 28

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday scheduled a public hearing for Monday, September 28, on the application of the Washington Gas Light Co. to purchase the Alexandria Gas Co. and the Washington Suburban Co. of Hyattsville.

The gas company has proposed to buy the two suburban plants from the Washington and Suburban Companies, which also owns controlling stock in the Washington company, for an amount not to exceed $1,375,000.

The holding company had previously registered its securities with the Securities and Exchange Commission preparatory to placing them on the market.

Odets-Cooper Thriller Great Fun at Palace

"General Died at Dawn" Red Meat; New Bills at Other Houses.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

"THE GENERAL DIED AT DAWN." A Paramount picture with screen play by Clifford Odets, based on a novel by Charles G. Booth, starring Gary Cooper and Madeleine Carroll. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Symphonic score by Werner Janssen. Previewed Wednesday, September 9.

The Communists, especially the Union Square colony in New York, are downright mad at their theater oracle, Clifford Odets, because, given a chance (or so they thought) to smear the class struggle across movie screens from Seattle to Miami, he turned out a script that is merely top notch entertainment.

True, the 29-year-old playwright of the Left does put into Gary Cooper's mouth some phrases about the downtrodden masses and the rights of the underprivileged but they emerge neither often nor strong enough to satisfy his Red disciples. But putting these chronic dissenters to one side, it is rather a certainty that the crisp dialogue, along with "The General's" spirited story, well pointed performances by stars and featured players alike, Lewis Milestone's direction and an excellent score by Werner Janssen, will find favor with you and you.

Just because the screen play is by the author of such Moscow-tinged pieces as "Waiting for Lefty" and "Till the Day I Die" and the director is the same one who gave us "All Quiet on the Western Front," Hollywood's greatest diatribe against war, don't expect to find "The General Died at Dawn" a reel propaganda. It is, rather, a red blooded, lusty melodrama about Chinese bandits with one narrow escape after another and a breath-stopping climax the like of which, if memory serves, has never before been done in talkies.

Gary Cooper, who, we think, will be a star for many, many years (if he chooses) because he is content to be himself and avoid "acting," gives us a Lucky O'Hara which is a worthy, though entirely different, successor to his Mr. Deeds. Come to think of it, perhaps "entirely different" is a bit strong. After all, Deeds and O'Hara do have at least a few things in common: Both are champions of the poor and both know how to take care of themselves.

O'Hara, an American adventurer, who has dedicated himself to purging North China of Gen. Yang and his ruthless bandits, accepts a dangerous assignment to carry a large sum of money to Shanghai, where it will be changed into guns and munitions to use against Yang. He boards a train, only to be captured a few miles out by the Chinese war lord.

Although he had been ordered to fly to Shanghai, O'Hara had been lured to betrayal by Judy Perrie (Madeleine Carroll), acting on the plea of her cowardly father who has cast his lot with Yang. O'Hara manages to escape from his captor's junk and kills Perrie, only to be recaptured by the bandit chieftain.

The hideous torture promised by Yang is about to start when a munitions salesman, shanghaied onto the general's junk, fatally stabs the general. The latter, dying, not only spares the sweet hearts' lives—by this time, you see, O'Hara has realized Judy betrayed him against her better judgment—but orders his 12-man guard to decimate themselves as proof of their fidelity.

That is a feebly inadequate sketch of the tale but it should be enough to establish "The General Dies at Dawn" as a jim dandy thriller, especially to the men folk.

Mr. Cooper and Miss Carroll are well cast. Akim Tamiroff, the Cuban agent in "Anthony Adverse," is a knockout as General Yang. His incisive portrayal makes him a cinch for more good roles in the future. Porter Hall as the weakling Perrie, Dudley Digges as O'Hara's superior, J. M. Kerrigan as a nefarious schemer named Leach and William Frawley as the arms salesman are uniformly excellent.

Columbia

"CHARLIE CHAN AT THE RACE TRACK." Twentieth Century-Fox production, screen play by Robert Ellis, Helen Logan and Edward T. Lowe from a story by Lou Breslow and Saul Elkins based on Earl Derr Biggers' character, "Charlie Chan." Starring Warner Oland. Directed by H. Bruce Humberstone. Reviewed Friday by Mary Harris.

A race horse named Avalanche is the pivot around which the doings spin. Avalanche is so good that it doesn't pay to run him at giveaway odds. So a group of thugs start a fire on board the ship carrying Avalanche and in the excitement switch him to the stall of Master Lad, who looks like Avalanche, but doesn't run like him. The stage is all set for a big killing with Avalanche booked to run as a "ringer" at 20-to-1 odds or better.

But Charlie Chan scuttles around and changes the horses back to their proper identities, incidentally catching a couple of murderers as well as breaking up the gambling ring.

In spite of a couple of highly thrilling horse races, there is a discernible lag in pace in "Charlie Chan at the Race Track" as compared with previous Charlie Chan pictures. Not that the redoubtable Charlie Chan, as played by Warner Oland, isn't as suave and entertaining as ever. Nor that the individual players don't do their bits like smart boys and girls. The difficulty lies somewhere in the dialogue and direction, the former being a bit too closely patterned and the latter suffering from a certain laxity in pattern. Charlie Chan, as one of the country's favorite movie characters, deserves a better setting.

Playing Chan, jr., the energy and zest of Keye Luke add a lot to the current Charlie Chan opus. Frankie Darro and Frank Coughlan, jr. as a couple of jockeys, make their parts stand out excellently.

Tim Ryan enlivens a short called "The Wacky Family," and there is a fairly nifty musical short, "Going Native," in addition to the newsreel.

Loew's Capitol

"THE ROAD TO GLORY." Twentieth Century-Fox production, screen play by Joel Sayre and William Faulkner, starring Fredric March, Warner Baxter, June Lang and Lionel Barrymore, with Gregory Ratoff, Julius Tannen, John Qualen and others. Directed by Howard Hawks. Previewed Tuesday, September 15.

Though it contains nothing new (save June Lang in her coming out party), though it straddles the fence by taking no definite stand on the question as to whether war should be cultivated or outlawed and though it deeply wrongs the comedy propensities of Gregory Ratoff, "The Road to Glory" is a better picture than it has a right to be.

The good old elements of two men in love with the same girl, the sacrifice of one's life that the girl may have her heart's choice without complications, the cannonading and machine-gunning which we have with us intermittently—all are combined in "The Road to Glory."

Capt. Paul La Roche (Warner Baxter) is the stern commander of a hard-boiled company in the French army, the year being 1916 and the place the Western Front. Lieut. Michel Denet (Fredric March) is assigned to the outfit and promptly strikes up a love affair with Monique (June Lang), whom La Roche loves but who considers him as a big brother rather than as a sweetheart.

Papa La Roche, father of the company commander, joins up under a false name because he wishes to do his bit for his country. After all, didn't he blow the charge at Sedan? The son orders the aged veteran from the outfit but by trickery he remains.

The company moves to the front. Orders are given to establish a telephone outpost in a dangerous section of "no man's land" in range of enemy machine gunners and snipers abound. Volunteers include March, Barrymore, Ratoff and a few others. The job is carried out, only to have a tragic climax when the elder La Roche, his courage gone, throws a grenade at his buddies whom he mistakes for Germans.

Denet (March) tries to cover him up when they return to Capt. La Roche, but the truth comes out as Ratoff, who dies in the movies for a change, passes away. The grand climax comes when the captain, stricken stone blind without apparent cause, allots to himself the suicidal task of directing an artillery attack from the "no man's land" outpost. His father volunteers to be his "eyes," his death wiping out the stigma of his earlier cowardice.

If we haven't mentioned Miss Lang, it's because her romance with March is relatively unimportant. Save that the love angle is deemed necessary for box office purposes, it might have been omitted. But then, no doubt, there would be the danger of too close a resemblance to "Journey's End," what with "The Road to Glory" having a scene in which soldiers sit in terror and wait for a mine being planted underneath their bunks to be set off.

In justice to Miss Lang, she gives a creditable, if not unique, performance. March, Baxter, Barrymore and their lesser colleagues are likewise satisfactory. It is a pity, however, that Ratoff has so few opportunities to make us laugh. The best he gets out of the script is a letter which he reads in the dugout while the fatal mine is being prepared below.

"Unless you send us a payment on the gramophone within a week," the letter says in effect, "you will find yourself in a very dangerous situation."

The Ninth Anniversary Revue, introduced by Maestro Phil Lampkin, overcomes an indifferent beginning to emerge finally as satisfying entertainment. While each of the five acts will have its partisans and its dissenters, we cast our huzzah for Red Donahue and his mule U-No, not from sentiment aroused by the reappearance of a grand old routine, but because he and his animal and the policeman-stooge are one of the funniest acts in vaudeville.

Florence and Alvarez are graceful and original ballroom dancers. A. Duval may be included among the more skillful artists of legerdemain, although the tricks in his bag are not unfamiliar to Washington audiences.

Charlie Stuart and Harry Martin open weakly, due to gag trouble, but when they warm up on guitar and harmonica and give free play to their natural talents they win a salvo of deserved applause. They might do worse than drop that burlesque blackout, which is done without a blackout, and acquire a few gags with a shorter growth of whiskers.

The Elida Dancers, held over from last week, offer new routines, the most striking of which might be termed a disappearing fan dance.

In lieu of an overture, Phil Lampkin and his men do a brief prelude whose twin theme is the Capitol's anniversary and the approach of school days. G. G. G.

"SWING TIME." RKO-Radio picturization of an original story by Erwin Gelsen and Howard Lindsay, adapted to the screen by Allan Scott, co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, with Victor Moore, Eric Blore, Georges Metaxa, Helen Broderick and dancing ensemble. Music by Jerome Kern. Directed by George Stevens. Reviewed (third week) by Sally Stroud.

This Astaire-Rogers film has not the sleek finish of "Roberta," nor the singable tunes which distinguished "Top Hat,' but it does have the "Bojangles of Harlem" number, with Astaire and his three shadows tapping out measures Bill Robinson well might envy. Too, it has the smoothness, the comic situations, the smart lines usually found in their vehicles.

Ginger has never given better dancing support; Eric Blore, Helen Broderick, Victor Moore and Georges Metaxa offer commendable assistance. Several of the numbers are lavishly staged. You might remember it is now in its third-week run, which is an indication of the great favor it has found with movie goers.

In the newsreel you may see Discovery at Narragansett, Gov. Landon's new portrait, Spain's passion flower, France's fighting forces, and a hydraulic jack invention of interest to motorists.

"It's a Greek Life," colored cartoon, has to do with the vastly amusing adventures of Mercury, a Yiddish blacksmith who wants to fly "like a boird," and two skittish ducks. Incidentally, the blacksmith is a satyr.

The portion of the bill which should insure your attendance is the March of Time release. One portion, taking its title from a recent Dorothy Thompson article, is "The Lunatic Fringe," concerning itself with the rise to power of the Coughlin-Townsend-Smith triumvirate, particularly Smith. Filled with candid shots of the Huey Long disciple, this bit is an astounding commentary on the influence he has amassed.

Good shohts: Smith practicing before his mirror; Smith's mighty voice bellowing through a Pullman car while over his berth hangs a "Quiet, please," signs. You are given the material to answer the question: Is this a man of destiny or a political windbag?

Since America consumes 30,000,000 quarts of milk daily, the sketch of the service of America's Pasteur, William T. Sedgwick, in combating milk contamination, is vitally interesting.

Music by Dr. Erich Wolfgang Korngold. Opera in Leghorn by Monteverde. Opera in Paris by Franchetti. Opera sequences staged by Natale Carossio. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Reviewed (continuation run) by W. A. Whitney.

From a mighty novel of more than 1,200 pages, into an equally imposing motion picture of more than two hours and a quarter in running time, Hervey Allen's "Anthony Adverse," upon which Warner Brothers have lavished a wealth of talent, enters the Metropolitan after a monumental day-and-date run at the Earle and the Ambassador theaters.

Considering the widespread fame of the original novel and the distinguished cast of performers and technical crew associated with the picture, little remains at this time to be added to those "notices" which have already appeared, couched in glowing terms. If one need more commendation, it may be stated that, when he saw the picture for the first time at the Avalon Theater, Easton Md., last Tuesday evening, Author Allen publicly praised in no uncertain terms the excellence of the treatment his book had received. And when the daddy of a famous novel praises its film version, it is indeed news!

With Fredric March, as Anthony, and Olivia de Havilland, as Angela, supported by Edmund Gwenn, Claude Rains, Anita Louise, Gale Sondergaard, Steffi Duna, Ralph Morgan, Henry O'Neill, Luis Alberni, Rollo Lloyd, Eily Maydon and Paul Sotoff in the major parts, highest quality acting is assured. And with Dr. Erich Wolfgang Korngold, as musical director, that aspect of production cannot but be excellent. And of the craftmanship of Mervyn LeRoy, the director, there can be no cavilling.

Earle's Feature Is Triumph for Director, Stars

"NINE DAYS A QUEEN." Gaumont-British picturization of a story by Robert Stevenson, co-starring Cedric Hardwicke and Nova Pilbeam, with John Mills, Desmond Tester, Sybil Thorndyke, Leslie Perrins, Frank Cellier, Veliz Aylmer, Gwen Ffrancon-Davies and John Laurie. Directed by Robert Stevenson. Reviewed Friday.

Here is a director's picture, a picture which, though blessed with excellent performances all along the line, is yet a triumph for the man who is both its author and its director, Robert Stevenson.

"Nine Days a Queen" (Earle), the story of a child noblewoman whose ill-fated star crossed the line of succession to the English throne, is an artistic delight, a gem of film creation which will be a proud milestone in the development of the cinema. Every factor—acting, direction, narrative, setting and technical handling—is worthy of the most articulate praise and, taken collectively, the result is a blend whose appeal cannot be denied.

Plucking his characters from the pages of sixteenth century English history, Stevenson has fashioned a screen play which need bow to few of our American films. And if this seems to be the cue to compare "Nine Days a Queen" with Katharine Hepburn's "Mary of Scotland," well, our choice is this unobtrusive, un-Hollywoodized importation from our British cousins.

As picturesque as a Currier & Ives, authentically depicting the London Henry VIII knew, "Nine Days a Queen" is the tragedy of Lady Jane Grey, who mounted the throne against her will and nine days later mounted the scaffold because the well-laid plans of the Earl of Warwick went awry at the cost of his own head and his son's, as well as the child Jane's.

The 16-year-old Miss Pilbeam, who has become a grown-up lady, indeed, since she faced the cameras for "Little Friend" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much," is capable beyond her tender years in the important, if not too difficult, role assigned her. Cedric Hardwicke who, unlike the juvenile actress playing opposite him, has been seen here in American-made pictures, is restrained and effective as the scheming Earl of Warwick. Little Desmond Tester, who may suffer the unwarranted accusation of attempting to be Freddie Barthblomew, is an admirable Edward VI.

Others in the rather small supporting cast deserve citation for their excellence. They include Felix Aylmer, Sybil Thorndyke, Gwenn Ffancon-Davies, John Mills and Leslie Perrins.

But the first bouquet must be tossed Robert Stevenson, writer and director, for a splendid job which, whether or not it becomes a financial success, is a treat to eyes welcoming a relief from Hollywood's pretense.

'Cuban Follies," on the Earle stage, is gay and lively. Ciro Rimac leads his rhumba orchestra as of yore and the receptiveness of yesterday's audience at the second show indicates that, at least where the Rimac unit is concerned, familiarity breeds content.

Don Zelaya, another welcome favorite, plays the piano and delivers an anatomy lesson. Charley Boy and Carito are their old devil-may-care selves, shaking and dancing to a fare thee well. Tito Coral sings (oh! for the days when vaudeville vocalists knew not what a microphone was) and Joe Arena and Co. are a very clever act devoted to tumbling and mystification, assisted by a trick bulldog. Then there is a line of "South American beauties."

We almost forgot to mention, in connection with the film review, that supplementary screen attractions include a good travel short on Hawaii ,a cartoon and a Paramount news strip. G. G. G.

"THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD." Twentieth Century's picturization a fine play by George Westley, adapted to the screen by Nunnally Johnson, starring George Arliss, supported by Florence Arliss, Loretta Young, Robert Young, C. Aubrey Smith, Helen Westley, Boris Karloff. Directed by Alfred Werker. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

The many portraits in the Arliss historical gallery bear a surprising resemblance one to the other, but his Nathan Rothschild stands out with vigor and clarity, more interesting to us than even his more famous Disraeli.

This is true probably because the story of the House of Rothschild has a force about it and a satisfaction reserved to those stories of triumph over oppression, cruelty and stupidity. There is quiet excitement in the rise of the House of Rothschild from Jew Street to the control of the banks of Europe and, through them, almost to the rule of Europe itself in the time of the Napoleonic wars.

Arliss' delight is always in the portrayal of the power of the mind and his Nathan Rothschild is commanding, sympathetic, shrewd and likable. His supporting cast is excellent, with Helen Westley leading them all as the mother of the five Rothschild bankers. Good performances are turned in by C. Aubrey Smith as the Duke of Wellington, Loretto Young as Nathan's daughter, Robert Young as her lover, Mrs. Arliss as Mrs. Rothschild, and Arthur Byron as a rival banker. Boris Karloff seems a little over sinister at times.

The film has worn well and is possibly even more timely today than when first issued. Certainly it is worthy of reviving and of a second viewing.

Most interesting of the subsidiaries is a travelogue of Yellowstone's many wonders. Other short subjects are the newsreel, a very unfunny issue of "News Laughs" in spite of Irvin S. Cobb's editing, and a rather dull reel concerned with the "Ave Maria" by Bach and Gounod.

CHAPTER 19.

Ellen Gets Letter.

Two or three days later Ellen found an envelope addressed to her among the pile of legal mail for Geddes, Hilton and Geddes. She pounced upon it. A black, small and flowing hand thanked dear Miss Greet for her kind note and the book of poems. The writer was also extremely partial to the poems of Francis Thompson. He understood that he was to have the pleasure of seeing her again at Villa Far Niente, at which time he would take the opportunity to thank her in person for her kind thought. In the meanwhile, he remained hers faithfully.

To Ellen the words, "yours faithfully," took on a depth of meaning.

* * * *

It was a rainy Sunday. A February rain, falling in its usual thorough and vigorous way.

From the start, Pam had found the day upsetting. It began with the arrival of a special delivery letter from Mr. Mallard, which sent him pacing up and down the rain swept terrace, just when she'd taken pride in his perpetual happy moods.

She beckoned him in.

"What's troubling you?"

"A letter from my friend and boss, Mr. Goldberg," Mal replied as he followed Pam over to the fire. "He's raising hell because I've broken my contract."

"Why, Mr. Mallard, I would have thought you the last person to break a contract!"

"I'm through with pictures."

"O, I hope not! What about your public who have been so loyal to you? You've given them nothing but fineness—idealism—all these years. We need that sort of thing more than ever now. We will miss you."

"It is kind of you to say so. That's what Sol is trying to tell me. I can't let you do it, too. It is Grimwold the public are really going to miss.

"The fact is, I'm a sociable fellow. I love people. I want to be one with them. And I've been pretty damned lonely."

Pam took his arm and led him over to the couch and sat down beside him, facing him squarely.

Invited to Play Golf.

"Nothing of the kind! I've constantly too many proofs. Take that doctor friend of yours. He's exactly the sort of man I like. Has he asked me to join him at golf, as he would other patients? No. He has come here, and after fulfilling his professional duties, he acts embarrassed as if he didn't know what to say next to a fellow who earns his living painting up his face . . . And even you, my dear Pamella. After all the blessed hours you've given me of your companionship—why do you go on mistering me? Every time you do it I feel as if you were deliberately pushing me back into my cocoon——"

"No, Mal, no! I don't mean to——"

"Then why do you keep holding me off?"

"I don't——"

"Only very rarely do you let me come close to you! And of all the people I've ever known, you're the one I could draw closest to."

Pam dared not look at him lest her eyes betray her.

"Part of what you say may be true, Mal. But the biggest part is your own fault. You hold yourself off. For instance, why do you wait to be invited down to dinner—to spend your evenings in the living room with me? Why don't you just come?"

"I—don't want to bore you."

"There! That kind of raw-edged sensitiveness is in reality just too much ego. It's probably helped you with your work. But it has made you suffer and hasn't been good for you, personally. How am I not to know that you stay to yourself because I am boring you? I certainly have shown you plainly enough how happy it makes me to have you coming and going freely in my home like one of the family——"

"O, Pam, please don't make yourself quite so dear to me!"

"But I want to!" Pam laughed.

"My dear, you are looking at a coward."

"Anything but!"

"Yes. A coward—with a well guarded heart, now nakedly defenseless.

Of course, you know, you understand that I'm not—unfortunately—a—a carefree bachelor?"

Pam knew nothing of the kind and, what is more, she didn't want to know it. But she managed a frightened "yes."

"You're in no danger," Mal went on with humble blindness, "but I am. I've a lot to confess to you about myself, Pam—some day. Not now. I can't spoil this peaceful haven with my scrambled problems—yet a little. When I go—eventually—will be time enough to tell you."

"No!" Pam cried. "No!"

But Mal's eyes were lowered as he stroked the purring cat, which cuddled in his arms with slit-eyed delight.

"Here's one," he said lightly, and buried his hand in Shadow's fur, "who accepts me quite simply as he finds me—just for myself."

"Why don't you have a dog, Mal?" Pam said impulsively. "They're wonderful companions——"

"I lost my dog not long ago after 12 years of abject devotion. He was with me constantly. Even slept by my bed. Along with his devotion he had a strange intelligence about me. We were off for a tramp one day in the high Sierras. Suddenly—I'd been mooning along in a way I have—I missed him. It took me a long time to find him. He was caught with a broken back in a trap set for mountain wild cats, and his jaws were stretched in a ghastly way from screaming. But even though I was so long in coming to help him, he died licking my hands . . . Sometimes, even yet, I hear him screaming in my dreams . . . No more dogs for me, Pamella. Nor—other important relationships——"

"O, Mal—don't say that!"

But Mal didn't see her secret. He had looked away from her and Shadow to Bert Glenford, who was coming through the doorway from the hall.

"What's this I hear about your quitting on us?"

Pamella felt Mal brace himself. She got up hurriedly to leave them.

"Stay with me!" he whispered.

But Pamella had great need of being alone. Before she could accomplish this, however, she learned that Mr. Glenford had been ordered on location out to Honolulu. He, too, had a few things to say about Mal letting them all down.

"Why, Levinsky is crazy to have a go at you, Mal. He says he can do things with you nobody's dreamed of——"

Hollywood's Film Folks

By Sidney Skolsky.

Mary Astor Applauded.

Hollywood, Sept. 18.

Kay Francis and Claude Rains are feuding . . . According to their friends, Director Lloyd Bacon and Cofin Nadine, the dancer, will be married about Christmas time.

KAY FRANCIS.

Douglas Churchill tells about the producer who was having lunch with a friend who wasn't connected with the picture business. The producer looked at his watch and said: "It's getting late; I've got to get back to the studio. We're having a conference to outline our year's program." The friend looked surprised and said: "You fellows don't make motion pictures deliberately, do you?" . . . Sam Hellman, speaking of a prominent actress, said, "She is always having an argument with herself—which she loves."

"Dodsworth," the picture with Walter Huston, Ruth Chatterton and Mary Astor, was previewed last night. Mary Astor was in the audience, and her companion was Marc Goodrich, the scenario writer. The picture is on for 15 minutes before Miss Astor appears.

* * * *

The audience greeted her with much applause. Her big scene, in which she begs Walter Huston, a married man, to run away with her, was so well played and directed that its story value held.. After the preview Mary Astor, greatly touched, said: "I can't thank everyone enough. It was the nicest thing ever done for me."

Woman's Body Found; Head, Hands Missing

Stanley Isaacs, 50-year-old farmer, discovered the body.

County Judge Vernon Leer ordered search for the head and hands. Coroner William Jenkins will hold an inquest on Saturday.

Culbertson on Bridge

"Dear Chief:

"My steadfast devotion to my cause, the Prevention of Cruelty to Bridge Hands, surprises even myself, who always has entertained the highest possible regard for my talents.

"The hand I am sending herewith is a lallapaloosa. Mangled though it was in both the bidding and the defensive play by the North and South players in a commuter's game last evening, it presents an interesting and little known point of bidding, and an opportunity for shrewd defensive tactics.

NORTH
♦K 10 9 7 6 5 4 3
♣None

WEST
♠8 5
♥Q J 10 9 8 3
♦None
♣J 9 8 7 4

EAST
♠Q J 10 9 7 2
♦A Q 8

SOUTH
♠K 6
♥A 5 4
♦J 2
♣A Q 6 5 3 2

"The actual bidding was:

East	South	West	North
1 spade	2 clubs	Double	2 diamonds
Pass	Pass	2 hearts	Pass
2 no trump	Pass	3 hearts	Pass
3 no trump	Pass	4 hearts	(final bid)

"You should write an article (or a book), chief, on correct rescuing. North's only bid was a fine example of sheer cowardice. How he could expect South to realize he held an eight-card suit and an outside ace I really can't say. Obviously, he should have shown that it wasn't a 'desperation rescue' by bidding three diamonds. I also think that East should have bid two spades instead of passing over two diamonds. He hardly could hope that West could double when he himself had the A Q 8. North-South, of course, could have spread the hand for five diamonds, but with North virtually tongue tied, there was nothing for South to do about it.

"North opened the seven of diamonds, dummy finessed and declarer got rid of his two losing spades. Then dummy's low trump was led. South ducked and won the next heart lead. Declarer ruffed the king of spades return, picked up South's trump, and led to the club king. South won, but never could make more than his one trump and two club tricks.

"Of course, the defenders could have taken two spade tricks on the opening lead, but I do not think North should be severely criticized for choosing to open diamonds. The real opportunity for defense was given to South later on.

"After watching declarer disgorge two spades on the ace and queen of diamonds (thereby placing North with an eight-card suit) South should have had an absolutely perfect count on both concealed hands. North could not possibly have a club, since one would be his limit on the bidding and, with it, he certainly would have led it rather than a diamond. Declarer, then, had five clubs and (from his persistence in rebidding hearts) six hearts in addition to the two spades already shown. Therefore South should have leaped on dummy's low trump lead with the ace and returned a club, while North still had a trump with which to ruff. After that nothing could have prevented South from taking his ace and queen of clubs for a one-trick defeat.

"Do you think I'm too smart for a mere SPY?"

Answer: I don't know what the average intelligence of spies is, but you suit me perfectly. Wish I had a dozen like you, all working (without emolument!) for the cause you mentioned: Prevention of Cruelty to Bridge Hands.

Today's Question.

Answer: A no trump overcall of an opponent's suit bid of one shows about three and one-half honor tricks, or more, at least five sure winners when vulnerable, and four sure when not vulnerable, and one or more stoppers in the opponent's suit. It is equivalent to a take-out double, except that a good share of its strength is in the opponent's suit.

Yesterday's headlines reported the arrest, by Spanish rebels, of the London Express correspondent, as well as a group which included H. R. Knickerbocker . . . The London Express had received no word from its representative, and so cabled an inquiry to its correspondent in a city, not in Spain . . . The reply read: "YES HE INSIDE OF HIS SCOOTER SEEN YESTERDAY UP-LINED WITH ROW OF BOSCH-FLOWN WHICH LEAVES DAILY LAY EGGS ON BIGGEST CITY AS THAT DOPE UNWANTED TO BE KNOWN SCRIBBLER IN-POPPED." . . . The Express deciphered the message to mean that the correspondents were last seen in a motor car, observing rebel planes manned by German fliers who were bombing Madrid. They tried to get a story and were placed in jail . . . The code telegram passed the censors because it was addressed to "Black Glass House, Fleet Street, London." The London Express Building is a modernistic black-glass structure located on Fleet Street.

The Chicago Cubs are reported to be dickering for the purchase of Frankie Frisch's five-year managerial contract with the Cards . . . Jimmie Savo, who was unable to get a job at the Hippodrome here last year, has been signed by Universal Films. He'll appear in the movie entitled "Hippodrome" . . . Local attorneys who were anxious to save time in getting corporate information yesterday, and therefore phoned instead of telegraphed the corporate division of the Secretary of State in Albany, were advised that the entire staff are "out on a clambake" . . . Hollywood at last is kidding the Mary Astor diary angle. Publicity releases for "My Man Godfrey" are in diary form. Miss Astor, incidentally, has been offered the starring role in the American version of "Ecstasy," the barred Czechoslovakian film.

Fox Studios still get 40 applications each week from moviegoers who insist they're doubles for Will Rogers. Two hundred of these applicants have made the vain trek to Hollywood . . . Ritter Brothers, the fur stylists who head prominent peace organizations and who are nationally known for their efforts to promote peace, just received the largest order in the history of their business. Fischer Noses Out Goodman, McLean Routs Voigt; Enter Final

Omahan Bows, 2 and 1, to Foe's Gallant Struggle in Wild Gale, After Match Is Tied 11 Times

Final to Be First British-American Affair in Eight Years.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Garden City, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Riding out the wildest and wettest gale in the 40-year history of the tournament, 24-year-old Johnny Fischer, American Walker Cup star from Cincinnati, and Scottish Jack McLean, 25-year-old Glasgow whisky salesman, today reached the final round of the United States amateur golf championship.

On the storm-tossed links of the Garden City Golf Club, Fischer outlasted the Omaha favorite, Johnny Goodman, to gain a hard-fought 2-and-1 triumph while McLean thrived on the home-like weather to overwhelm George Voigt, Metropolitan veteran 8 and 7.

The outcome of the two 36-hole semifinal struggles with the hazards and the elements, including a gale that reach 50-mile velocity at times and rain that came down in solid sheets, produced the first British-American final in eight years.

Date of Play Doubtful.

The championship has been out of the country since then, going to Canada in Ross Somerville's possession in 1932, but no Briton from overseas has fired a title challenge since T. Philip Perkins went down before Bobby Jones in the final round at Brae Burn in 1928. McLean, a formidable shotmaker with a game made to order for Garden City's historic layout, has a chance to duplicate the victory of England's Harold H. Hilton, achieved in 1911.

Fischer and McLean will fight for the title vacated by Lawson Little over the 36-hole route, but whether it will be tomorrow or Sunday depends on the weather and playing conditions. It looked extremely doubtful tonight, with the storm still raging and the course so thoroughly water-logged, that play would be possible tomorrow.

Officials of the United States Golf Association debated a day's postponement, announced once that it would be made, then changed their minds. Weather reports indicated little, if any, possibility of abatement in stormy conditions by tomorrow. However, John G. Jackson, president of the U. S. G. A., recalled the postponement notice and said a decision would be made by 7:30 a. m., Eastern standard time, an hour before the scheduled teeing-off time.

Fischer Shows Courage.

If, as most everyone expects, the title round is set back a day, it will mark the first postponement in the annals of the amateur championship.

The surprise today was not that anyone won or lost, but that they managed to play at all.

More at home than any of his fellow semifinalists, through finally conceding it was "a bit thicker than a Scotch mist," the doughty McLean produced the steadiest, most effective performance, but no mariner ever piloted a leaky ship through a gale at sea with more resourceful courage than Fischer exhibited in taking Goodman's measure.

While McLean, six up at the halfway point, merely had to steer his game along conservative lines to dispose of his veteran opponent, Fischer waged the hardest kind of a dog fight to beat "the man who beat Jones" in 1929, the man who won the National Open title in 1933 and had been made the betting choice of the "wise ones" to succeed to the vacant amateur throne.

Battle Is Close.

A medalist twice before the tournament was turned into an all match-play free-for-all, Fischer never before had even gotten so far as the semifinals. The tall son of a Cincinnati mailman has all the shots, especially from tee to green, but few thought he could compete on anything like even terms with Goodman around the putting surfaces. The fact that he did so, under conditions that made nearly every shot a gamble, dispelled any lingering doubt about Fischer's ability under pressure.

Southern Grid Teams Open Seasons

Most of College Elevens Don't Begin Schedules Until Next Week.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 18.—Reserving grand opening ceremonies for next week, college football gets away to a faltering start tomorrow with most of the action centering in Dixie.

Only Kentucky and Mississippi of the Southeastern Conference will swing into action, the former playing Maryville as usual in its opening game and Mississippi clashing with Union (Tenn.) University. The enlarged Southern Conference, however, will be busy with Duke beginning defense of its conference title against the newly admitted Davidson outfit in a night game at Greensboro. North Carolina State will play Elon, with other contests pitting South Carolina against Erskine, Clemson against Presbyterian, Virginia Military against Wofford and Virginia Tech against Roanoke.

Otherwise tomorrow's program is confined to the smaller colleges and only a few of them will make so early a start in a campaign that won't end until December.

Ohio State's Coach Loses Notebook

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 18 (AP).—Disappearance of a notebook containing many Ohio State plays creased the face of Coach Francis A. Schmidt with a frown today as he sent the Buckeyes through routine afternoon drill.

Schmidt said the book might be "strayed, lost or stolen," and that he hoped for its reappearance, even though he knew all the plays by heart.

October 2 Date Spurned by Gallagher

Everett Battle Hinges on His Acceptance; Ahern Remains Neutral.

The projected 15-round tussle between District Heavyweight Champion Buck Everett and Marty Gallagher for the local title reached another impasse yesterday when the parties concerned failed to agree on a date for the long-awaited bout.

"We have been fiddling about for two years now, trying to get Gallagher to fight Everett," he declared. "For the past three weeks, while Gallagher was trying to make up his mind whether to fight Buck or not, I dickered for a bout with Johnny Erjvak in Kansas City."

"Gallagher hemmed and hawed and I thought we were going to get the run-around again, so I signed to meet Erjvak October 10. I cannot cancel that fight now without putting myself in Dutch with the Kansas commission. Neither can I take that fight sooner than eight days after the Gallagher bout. Marty will have to go October 2—or not at all."

Gallagher is holding out for a date not before October 5. The big Foggy Bottom fist flipper has just returned from his honeymoon and feels that he cannot get in his best condition before that time.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, who arranged the bout for the Joe Turner forces, is practically neutral, but hopes the earlier date will be settled upon so that a tentative schedule he has arranged for the indoor season will not be disrupted.

Emory-Henry Held To 0-0 Tie in Debut

Emory, Va., Sept. 18 (AP).—Emory and Henry College and Randolph Macon fought to a scoreless tie here tonight, the two teams sharing almost equally in honors and each lacking the offensive power to pierce the other's defense when in scoring territory.

Emory and Henry made 8 first downs, against 12 for Randolph-Macon. It was the State's first football game of the 1936 season.

Susquehanna Football Strike Is Terminated

Selinsgrove, Pa., Sept. 18 (AP).—E. T. Yorty, Susquehanna University official, announced the "strike" of 14 football players was settled today and that they will report to coach A. A. Stagg, jr., for practice tonight.

Yorty did not disclose the terms of settlement. The players refused to report for practice because, they said, it would curtail their wages as employes at the colony for epileptics.

Cubs Retake 2d; Blank Cards, 3-0

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 18.—Lonnie Warneke kept alive the Chicago Cub's almost dead hopes of overhauling the New York Giants in the National League race today by choking off the St. Louis Cardinals with three hits for a 3-to-0 shutout triumph.

The victory, the Cubs' sixth over the Cardinals in 17 starts this season, hoisted them back into second place, a half-game ahead of the Gas House gang—but five full games behind the virtually "in" Giants, who were idle today.

Warneke, who scored shutouts over the Giants in his last two starts against the league leaders, was a great pitcher, as he racked up his fifteenth decision of the campaign. And the Cubs, after wasting early scoring opportunities, became infected with the spirit of the thing in the fifth inning long enough to provide the lean Arkansan with his three-run margin.

Fans Eight Men.

He struck out eight men, seven of them in the first four innings, and did not give up a hit until Art Garibaldi, rookie second baseman, smashed out a single in the fourth with one out. Warneke put a stop to that by striking out Pepper Martin and Joe Medwick, the latter for the second time. With two gone in the fifth, Don Gutteridge, another Gas House Gang recruit infielder, drilled a triple to center, but died there when Stan Hack threw out Brusie Ogrodowski.

The last hit, a single to left field, was made by Garibaldi at the start of the ninth, but Martin, Medwick and Johnny Mize went out in order to give Warneke his shutout.

After the fading league champions had clipped Leroy Parmalee, the Cardinls starter, for five hits in the second and third innings without managing to score, they went on a production basis in the fifth. Warneke popped to Ogrodowski to start the inning, but Augie Galan lashed a single to right. He scored on Phil Cavarretta's long double to right center.

Loses Control.

Parmalee lost his control at that point and before Ed Heusser could be rushed in, walked Billy Herman and Frank Demaree, and pitched two wide ones to Hack. Heusser remained long enough to get Hack on a fly to center, on which Cavarretta scored, be rapped for a single by Gabby Hartnett that scored Herman, and turn loose a wild pitch that moved Demaree to third and Hartnett to second.

Henry ("Cotton") Pippen struck out Billy Jurges to end the uprising, and worked the next two innings with a yield of only one hit. He gave way for Pinchbatsman Jim Collins in the eighth and George Earnshaw finished.

Pittsburgh, Fordham, Princeton Are Rated Pre-Season Football Favorites in East Circles

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 18.—Pre-season prospects point to Pittsburgh, Fordham and Princeton as the Big Three of the 1936 Eastern football season. Pitt and Fordham definitely are contenders for the mythical national gridiron title.

Pitt was ranked No. 10 nationally last year, and has three letter men back for every position except center. Jimmy Crowley, Fordham coach, says: "Watch Pitt. It was an all-sophomore team last year and yet yielded to only one rival, Notre Dame, on a field goal in the last minute of play."

During Jock Sutherland's regime at Pittsburgh, the Panthers have never had a bad team. They always have been good, and this year may be Sutherland's greatest eleven.

Fordham has the toughest schedule in the school's history, meeting Southern Methodist, St. Mary's, Pittsburgh, Purdue and Georgia. The Rams will be strong on defense but will have to develop a more versatile offense to combat the teams on this year's schedule. Coach Jimmy Crowley's main job is to develop an aerial attack and a man to take the place of Left-Halfback Joe Maniaci, who gained more ground than any other two men on the Fordham team last year.

Princeton has high hopes of another undefeated, untied season. The Tigers lost heavily from last year's all-triumphant team, but Coach Fritz Crisler has five regulars and eight squadmen back around which to build another strong team. The schedule highly favors the Tigers, with no more than four really tough spots on a list that includes Williams, Rutgers, Penn, Navy, Harvard, Cornell, Yale and Dartmouth.

A Brawny Scot at His Favorite Pastime

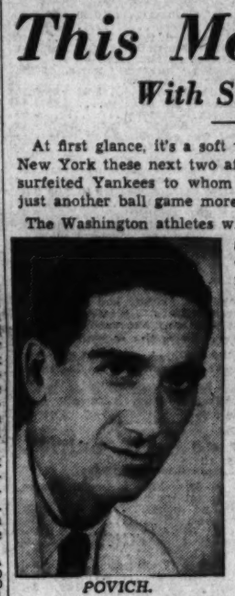
This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

At first glance, it's a soft touch that the Nats appear to have up in New York these next two afternoons, meeting as they do the victory-surfeited Yankees to whom another ball game more or less is, well, just another ball game more or less.

The Washington athletes will be out there at Yankee Stadium struggling for those three ball games with an eye cocked toward the $1,200 second-place money they might mean for each of the Nats. Those games, as I was saying, are utterly meaningless to the Yanks who clinched the pennant a week ago, and thus the Nats' opposition during the two days in New York appears ripe for plucking.



POVICH.

But Manager Bucky Harris, wisely, isn't depending on that—at least he shouldn't be. Because the pressure is now on the side of the Nats, exclusively. When a team has nothing to lose, well, that's when a team is dangerous. Those Yanks will be loose up there at the plate, swinging from down near the end of the bat, all tenseness gone. And that's the ideal mood for a ball team.

As a strictly betting proposition, irrespective of the comparative talents of the clubs, the Yanks, with the pressure off, should be the favorites. One futile lunge at one bad ball, one mistake in the field may be costly to the Nats. The Yanks won't be operating under that burden. They'll be light-hearted in there and that's a terrific edge.

Of course, it's against the rules for one club to ease up on another. Two members of the Giants were tossed out of the big leagues in 1924 for even suggesting that the Phillies "lay down" in a certain game near the end of the pennant race. But even the most considerate of the Yanks will do the Nats no favors during those three games in Yankee Stadium. If there is anything that a ball player likes more than his base hit, I dunno what it is.

"The way to fight these duskies is to slam hell out of 'em at the opening bell and they don't come back."

Those are the words of Al Ettore, elicited from the Philadelphia heavyweight by my fran, Paul Mickelson, of the Associated Press, during an interview with Ettore who is training for his battle with Joe Louis four days hence.

Seems like there is something more than faintly reminiscent of other prebattle statements in the plan of attack announced by Ettore. In fact, it is as unoroginal as a plea of not guilty. And there is a staggering sheaf of evidence that it won't work.

If I remember rightly, it was Kingfish Levinsky who first deduced that the way to beat a Negro heavyweight was to start throwing right hands at the opening bell. But somehow the Kingfish never got around to that and Joe Louis cold-cocked him in one round.

Then Max Baer, with a hey, nonny, nonny and a hearty laugh announced that the way to beat these colored heavies was to belt 'em hard at the opening bell. But Baer evidently didn't hear the bell or forgot his good intentions. Anyway he was just another victim of Joe Louis' open season on canvasbacks.

From out in Chicago last winter, Charley Retzlaff announced that the way to beat Louis was to swarm over him at the first bell. Retzlaff actually did that. They carried him out in the first round. Jack Sharkey last month reminded his admirers that the way to beat a Negro fighter was to let fly in the first round. He did and then never did discover whether he was fighting Joe Louis or the floor. Both hit him hard and often.

Max Schmeling didn't have any trick ideas about how to beat a Negro heavyweight, Joe Louis in particular. The only man to beat Louis in his professional career was the man who didn't permit the color of Louis' skin to alter his habitual battle plans.

Dick Merrill, the pilot who steered Harry Richman across the Atlantic and back again, once was a fight manager . . . he pulled the strings on Andy Chaney when Andy was a good fighter . . . Gene Venzke returned from the Olympics sporting a very fancy cane . . . which was made from the pieces of a broken javelin . . . Marty Glickman, of Syracuse, and Forrest Towns, of the University of Georgia, both members of the United States Olympic team, both are excellent football players . . . The District Boxing Commission's secretary, Maj. Harvey L. Miller, has been instructed to urge upon the National Boxing Association during its coming convention in Houston, Tex., that all suspensions imposed by N. B. A. States be made to apply to boxing any place . . . and, that if a contestant while suspended by N. B. A. States take part in bouts in States not affiliated with the association, he be suspended permanently . . . a welterweight now campaigning around New York is known as Doo Dab Anderson . . . and, of course, Tin Can Romanelli is still fisticuffing in and about Gotham . . . the Southern Intercity Bowling League will give way here this year to a newly organized league comprised of teams in the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia . . . bowlers found it too tough to travel around the old league, which had teams from Washington, Baltimore, Bethesda, Hyattsville and Norfolk among others.

Browns Stop Chisox, 6-5; Help Nats

5-Run Splurge in Third Sends Chicago Into Tie With Tigers.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Sept. 18.—The Browns doubled the White Sox into defeat today, 6 to 5, and shoved Jimmy Dykes' men down into a virtual tie with Detroit for runner-up position to the champion Yanks in the American League race.

Chicago has a one-percentage-point edge over the 1935 world champions, .538 to .537. Detroit won today from Cleveland, 6 to 3.

The damaging doubling all came in the third inning and accounted for five of the seventh-place Browns' six runs. Jim Bottomley's homer onto the right-field pavilion roof in the seventh was the other.

First Tom Carey doubled to open the inning and after Al Thomas fanned, Lyn Lary walked. Harland Clift flied out to Ray Radcliff. The Sox breathed easier. But up came Julius Solters and doubled down the left field foul line, scoring Carey and Lary and on Radcliff's fumble, went to third. Then Beau Bell doubled Solters home and after Bottomley's single scored Bell, Rollie Hemsley doubled to center scoring Bottomley. Shores, one of four Sox pitchers, then relieved John Whitehead, walked Carey on purpose to fill the bases and forced Thomas to tap to Luke Appling.

Girl, 13, Competes In Outboard Race

Veteran pilots of Class A outboards may be driven to cover in the forthcoming President's Cup Regatta by a 13-year-old miss, who has almost literally been raised in a racing boat.

The little girl, whose 1936 racing record stamps her as a real threat in any man's contest, is Jane Hallas, of Amber, N. Y. Papa Hallas is the ownwer of an outboard motor repair and sales establishment, which accounts for Jane's familiarity with the little skiddy craft.

At an age when most children are learning the intricacies of skooters and tricycles, Jane was dismantling outboard motors—when not busy sliding over open water with the guiding helm of an outboard motor in her hand.

Driving like a veteran, she has made her boat one of the craft to beat in almost every race she has entered. Her record this year shows she finished fifth at Amsterdam, N. Y.; third in the races at Watkins Glen and fourth at Geneva, N. Y.

Miss Miley Bows In Canadian Open

By the Associated Press.

Dixie, Que., Sept. 18.—With the aid of one stunning upset, two Canadian golfers today advanced to the final round of the Canadian Women's Open Golf Championship, a tournament which no player from the United States has been able to win since Maureen Orcutt turned the trick in 1931.

Mrs. A. B. Darling, a "young veteran" from Montreal, defeated one of the favorites, Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., 3 and 2, to enter the last round against the first-choice player, Margery Kirkham, of Montreal. Miss Kirkham, the medalist and champion four years ago, eliminated Marjorie Harrison, of Au Sable Forks, N. Y., 2 and 1.

Nats in N. Y. For Crucial Battles

3 Games With Yanks May Decide Club's 2d-Place Bid.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 18.—Yankee Stadium will be the battleground of the Nats during the next two days in their fight for the elusive second-place money in the American League pennant race.

On their success in a single game with the Yankees tomorrow and a double-header on Sunday will depend in a great measure the Nats' chances of acquiring second place and the individual player's share of approximately $1,200.

The Washington club profited in its idleness yesterday although remaining in fourth place. The Browns' victory over the White Sox at St. Louis reduced the margin between second place and fourth place to a mere game.

Developments at Detroit where the Tigers beat Cleveland, were no help to the Nats, however. The third-place Tigers increased their advantage over Washington to a full game and gained a technical tie with the White Sox for second place.

Nat's Schedule Harder.

The White Sox have now lost one less game and won one more than the Nats. The Tigers have won two more games than Washington, but show the same number of losses.

The Nats, however, are faced with a more severe schedule than either of the other second-place contenders. While they are meeting the Yankees in three games, the White Sox will be taking on the Brown and the Tigers will be playing Cleveland.

Manager Bucky Harris will send his leading pitcher, Jimmy DeShong, against the Yanks tomorrow. On Sunday, Buck Newsom and Earl Whitehill will take the mound in the double-header.

Capt. Buddy Myer, out of the line-up for two months with a stomach ailment, accompanied the Nats to New York tonight, and may see action in one of the three games scheduled here.

Feller Victim As Tigers Win

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 18.—Young Bob Feller couldn't get his fast ball past the Detroit Tigers today and so he and the Cleveland Indians were clubbed, 6 to 3, by the former world champions.

Tommy Bridges, the Tigers' No. 1 elbower, stole the strike-out spotlight from Feller by fanning ten Tribe batters, allowing but four hits and walking only three, to chalk up his twenty-second victory of the year against 11 defeats.

A four-run Detroit rally in the sixth sewed up the game for the Tigers and marked the end of Feller's mound assignment for the day. He was touched for seven hits, one of them Goose Goslin's twenty-fourth homer, in the six innings he worked.

Bridges might have had a shut-out but for Charley Gehringer's error on a double play ball in the ninth, when Cleveland did all its scoring.

Alexandrine Worth $47 In Second

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 18.—High winds, top coats, a drizzle, long shots, favorites and some 7,000 customers greeted the opening of Maryland's fall racing season here today. The $2,500 added Susquehanna Handicap, named for the adjacent river which showed a blanket of white caps throughout the afternoon, was won by Jay Jay, a determined and speedy gelded son of Wise Counsellor. Jay Jay runs only occasionally, but when he runs, he runs. Three times he has marched postward this year and each time he has accounted for the winning end of the purse.

Opposed by six other sprinters, the majority of which have had busy summer campaigns, Jay Jay bounced to the finish line a length and a half ahead of Aneroid which, in turn, had an advantage of a neck over Whereaway, a frequent winner from the West. Roman Soldier, backed into favoritism despite an assignment of 122 pounds, could do no better than fourth.

For a few fleeting seconds immediately after the field was sent away by Starter Milton, Roman Soldier appeared to be headed for the success his backers expected. However, Aneroid and Jay Jay came through on the inside as a team to battle it out for the lead. After three furlongs, Jay Jay shook off Aneroid while Roman Soldier had dropped far back. Whereaway was saving ground along the rail and appeared to be a menace at this stage.

Jay Jay opened daylight on entering the stretch but the latter made a slight challenge. Jockey Balaski asked Jay Jay for more speed and the gelding responded with a spurt that Aneroid could not match. Roman Soldier came on under a drive to gain some ground in the final stages.

Jay Jay, which paid a $10.60 mutuel, ran the sprint route in 1:12, creditable time over the fast but rather "dead" track.

The Bomar Stable came through with the first winner of the Maryland season with Siam, a sprightly son of Jean Valjean taking the decision from Careful Miss. Sun Mica was third in the field of eleven. Siam rallied when put to a drive in the stretch and wore down Careful Miss to be drawing out at the finish. Siam brought joy to the favorite players with a $6.40 mutuel.

Camera Finish in Second.

The new camera and the judges wrestled for 16 minutes with the official placing of the horses at the end of the second race. After they had failed to find anything concrete in the first picture, the judges ordered another, taken just after the finish, and finally came to the conclusion that Alexandrine had taken a nose verdict from Anglo Saxon. The winner had come up on the outside of the pace-setter. There was no question about Live Granite being third. Those who had tickets on Alexandrine yelled with glee while the Anglo Saxon betters booed. Alexandrine brought a $47.20 mutuel.

Miss Ginbar saw to it that the camera was not needed in the third race. Under a brilliant ride by Jackey H. LeBlanc, she came from far back to take command at the far turn and gave her backers no anxious moments for the remainder of the six-furlong test. Skyride was second after being a forward factor from the start. Sylvia G. was going gamely in third position. Miss Ginbar was a $5.30 favorite.

Chasar Finishes Fast.

Chasar, hefty Crusader gelding, came from last to first to take the fifth race and pay a $10.60 mutuel. Ridden by Jockey Jackie Westrope, Chasar was allowed to settle into stride and then came around his field to catch and displace Master Lad in the stretch drive. En Masse was third in the group of a dozen going the mile and 70 yards route. Master Lad opened a lead of five lengths going to the stretch turn, but was a tiring second.

To the tune of a $13.20 mutuel, Moon Side, a son of Broadside, led from start to finish in the mile and 70 yard test that was the sixth race. Moon Side shook off early challenges from Spartan Lady and then had enough left to stave off the closing charge of Light Brook. Third money in the field of nine went to Pomposity.

The day's final went to More Pep at an $18.10 mutuel after the gelding took a length decision from Dunair in a stretch drive. Third money went to Viva Pete.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SIAM, $6.40, $4.50, $2.80; CAREFUL MISS, $9.60, $5.20; SUN MICA, $4.30.

SIAM, crowded back soon after the start, came around field entering the stretch to wear down CAREFUL MISS in the final drive. CAREFUL MISS shook off BLACKSOD to assume command at the first turn, drew out to a good lead in the early stretch, but could not resist the winner while under brisk handling. SUN MICA, forwardly placed from the start, tired suddenly in the last eighth. ABBOT'S HOUR went evenly but could not menace the leaders. CONTRITE, forced to race on the outside, gained steadily throughout the running. BLACKSOD quit after showing high early speed. TIDE LADY broke her leg at far turn.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Conowingo. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:50½. Off at 2:58. Winner, J. B. J. Townsend's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ALEXANDRINE, $47.20, $27.20, $13.40; ANGLO SAXON, $13.10, $7.40; LIVE GRANITE, $3.30.

ALEXANDRINE, first away, failed to match early speed of GAY BALKO and ANGLO SAXON, rallied sharply when placed to punishment in the last sixteenth and was up in the concluding strides. ANGLO SAXON, hustled into contention in the opening furlong, disposed of GAY BALKO in the straightaway and fought it out willingly. LIVE GRANITE was faithfully bothered while closing with a belated rush. UNEASY could not find racing room in the late stages. AMERICA FIRST, squeezed back at the far turn, was going gamely at the end. GAY BALKO tired badly after leading to the stretch. LADY MARYLAND went well for three furlongs.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, second. Went to post at 3:35½. Off at 3:42½. Winner, Mrs. M. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS GINBAR, $5.30, $3.40, $2.80; SKY RIDE, $5.30, $3.40; SYLVIA G. (field), $3.30.

MISS GINBAR, off slowly, was sent to the outside for racing room going into the far turn, circled leaders to take command with a bold rush and easily held away to the finish. SKY RIDE disposed of BARNSTORMER in the opening quarter to take command and continued gamely after being displaced by the winner. SYLVIA G., a contender from the beginning, came up on the inside for the final drive and closed full of run. CORA KAY gained sharply swinging for the stretch, but hung in the closing eighth. DOESKIN began to tire after three furlongs. RUNNING WATER went evenly. BARNSTORMER, fractious at the post, had good early speed.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $2,500. The Susquehanna Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:10½. Off at 4:15. Winner, Howard Bruce's ch. g. (3), by Wise Counsellor—Dry Girl. Trained by F. Garrett. Value to winner, $1,850; second, $500; third, $250; fourth, $100. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:12.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JAY JAY, $11.60, $5.40, $3.00; ANEROID, $5.50, $3.30; WHERE AWAY, $2.80.

JAY JAY sent to the leaders under hustling tactics after breaking poorly, drew clear of ANEROID at the far turn and was kept to a drive through the stretch. ANEROID assumed command early and continued gamely when displaced. WHERE AWAY saved ground throughout and had no excuses. ROMAN SOLDIER, first out of the gates, dropped back and then came with a rush in the last furlong. BILLY BEE went evenly but could not menace the leaders. WISE SISTER and JIMMIE CABANISS were outrun.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000. Grade C Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:43. Off at 4:46. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHASAR (entry), $10.80, $5.10, $4.00; MASTER LAD, $14.60, $8.90; EN MASSE, $14.30.

CHASAR, allowed to settle into best stride and a trailer to the backstretch, went to the outside for racing room, came with a sharp move at the final bend and withstood a long drive to be drawing out at the end. MASTER LAD spurted to the front to assume a long lead swinging for the stretch, but tired gradually during the last three-sixteenths. EN MASSE gained steadily through the running and was going well at the end. WAR EMBLEM pressed the early pace of PATSEY BEGONE and tired suddenly in the stretch run. PATSEY BEGONE was hard used getting to the front and faltered. STOCKS failed to rally when placed to a drive. MY COUNT went forwardly for six furlongs.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:15½. Off at 5:19. Winner, E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOON SIDE, $13.20, $5.70, $4.50; LIGHT BROOK, $7.10, $4.80; POMPOSITY, $4.40.

MOON SIDE broke on top, was steadied along in front while saving ground, withstood challenges from SPARTAN LADY and held LIGHT BROOK safe in the final drive. LIGHT BROOK, slow to begin and taken under slight restraint, gained sharply swinging for the stretch and was wearing down the winner gradually. POMPOSITY improved his position sharply approaching the far turn, but went evenly thereafter. KIEVSON was in close quarters when making his move entering the stretch and failed to rally. SPARTAN LADY tired after chasing the pace.

Investigation Downs Millers, 7 to 2, in Post Titular Series

6 Hits Given Industrial Champs

Nichols Stars on Mound; Errors Hurt Cause of Furniture Club.

By John R. Vosburgh.

The hurricane struck Washington about 4 p. m. yesterday, so far as the Miller Furniture ball team is concerned, in the 6 foot 2 inch person of young Dick Nichols, a right-handed fast ball pitcher from Bureau of Investigation.

Young Nichols, a protege of Walter Johnson and who looks like the Big Train every time he winds up, set the Industrial League champions back with six hits and a 7-2 beating in a crucial game of the Post Association week-day play-off series. The Bethesda boy breezed his smoke ball past the Millermen faster than the stiff gale ripping over the field and alternated it with a puzzzling sinker.

One earned run was scored off the big youngster. On the other hand, only three of the seven runs rolled up by the United States Government champions were of the earned variety and Lefty Joe Porter, Miller pitcher, retired at the end of the seventh inning with a creditable performance on the books.

The Furniture team ran into difficulty in the second inning when it booted the ball all over the lot to help the G-men get off to a 4-0 lead. Lew Russell took first when Lyman McAboy, third baseman, drew the first sacker off the bag after fielding his grounder, Porter walked Ed Colliflower and Russell scored when Herman Xander singled to right.

Fred Wahler muffed Goof Taylor's grounder and Colliflower scored when Nichols singled. Xander also scoring when Knocky Thomas misplayed the throw-in. Taylor, on third by the time, made it 4-0 on Walter Morris' fly to right. Investigation scored its first earned run in the seventh when Fisher doubled over third and scored on Morris' singled over second.

Strikes Out Eight.

The Millermen collected half of their six hits in the seventh and both runs. Wahler singled, Tommy Nolan singled, Wahler taking third and scoring a moment later when Xander's return of a pitch to Nichols rolled wild. Sugrue singled through short and Knocky Thomas drove Nolan across with a single to center but Sugrue for some reason held third. Boyce batted for Porter and shot a fast grounder to short where Walter Fischer converted it into a lightning double play.

The G-men got to Carl Wahler, who replaced Porter, for two more in the ninth on Pepco Barry's single on a bunt, a triple by Ed Colliflower and Xander's single to left. Tommy Nolan tripled for the Millermen in the last half of the ninth with two out but Nichols fanned Sugrue for his eighth strikeout victim and the final out.

Tech Invades Baltimore Tonight

By John R. Vosburgh.

As eager to start the football season tonight as a politician to mount a soap-box, Tech High's 1936 grid corps bided its time impatiently yesterday. "No practice" was the order of Coach Hap Hardell, and so the boys spent much of their time merely speculating on what they are going to do to Baltimore City College when Hap turns 'em loose at 8 p. m. in Johns Hopkins Stadium, Baltimore.

The squad hasn't had a workout for two days and consequently is wound up like a mainspring. Most of the squad of 35 Hardell is taking to the Maryland metropolis will be about to play in their first football game. Of the 11 starting players, only three saw action worthy of mention last season.

Tech hasn't invaded Baltimore since the season of 1934. That year the Maroon played Baltimore Poly in a night game and came back with a 28-to-0 victory. Hardell teams as a rule have met with fairly consistent success in the neighboring town, and this 1936 edition is all set to maintain the record.

Opinion Is Divided.

In fact, the squad is considerably more optimistic than Coach Hardell. The latter alternates between semioptimistic remarks and his usual pessimistic predictions. He at least is certain that Tech will be stronger this year than last season when it finished third in the interhigh series.

The Techmen had two weeks of first-class training at the University of Maryland before returning to the city Thursday. The line which will probably get the first-string call tonight will include two 1935 regulars, Jimmy King and Walter Connolly, ends; big Jake Fleischmann, 200-pound Roosevelt High fullback of last season, is holding down one tackle job with Whitey Rawlins, who saw a little service last year, at the other.

Joe Pallas and Norris Ball, a pair of green guards, and Buddy Clay, center, seeing his first year as a regular, complete the forward wall. In the backfield, Quarterback Stan Wells is the lone regular back in uniform. Ludwig Kroutil, fullback, saw some service, as did Henry Rassier and Carl Sachs, but Kurby Foans and Johnny Williamson, probable backfield starters, are also newcomers.

Dougherty Recovering.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Southeast A. C. Drills.

With the hopes of repeating last year's record of no defeats, the Southeast A. C. will hold its first heavy drill today at 11:00 a. m. under the supervision of Bobby McVean, former C. U. player. Seasoned players and candidates are asked to report on time.

Headley's 2 Long Runs Feature Maryland Drill

As if to confound his critics and refute rumors and written stories that he will be relegated to a reserve role when Coach Frank Dobson gets around choosing Maryland's first-string football team next week, Coleman Headley, lean and lithe track star and halfback, tore off two long touchdown runs—one for 92 yards—leading his Yellow team to a 12-to-4 victory over the Whites in a practice game.

Breaking off tackle like a master tank hitting a cardboard wall, and skirting ends like greyhounds after a rabbit, Headley staged a private demonstration that undoubtedly will land him a regular post. That 92-yard jaunt was made on a fake-punt play and involved some of the prettiest broken-field running seen this year. Almost down three times, the boy sidestepped and stiff-armed like a pro posing for pictures—and just as easily. His second touchdown was made after a comparatively short run of 15 yards.

With Headley in the Yellows' backfield were Hewitt, Daly and Gianoly. Opposing them were Ellinger, Gormley, Egan and Weidinger. Guckeyson, Wheeler and "Jumbo Jim" Meade were not used.

Georgetown was out for only one session yesterday, and that lasted 40 minutes. Feeling that his men have been drawn rather fine by two weeks of intensive work, Hagerty intends to take things easy again today. Next week, however, there will be scrimmaging every day and every workout will count, for Hagerty intends to choose his starting line-up at the end of the period.

"Irish" Carroll's ball-carrying brilliance was overshadowed yesterday in practice by the punting of "Spec" Foley, at Catholic University. Foley, who is destined to be the No. 1 quarterback, got off a couple of 70-yard beauties that had even Coach "Dutch" Bergman gasping. The former Tech High School stalwart turned in several good kicking exhibitions last year but his practice work thus far indicates that he will be even better this season.

Ernie Dusek Next Foe for Managoff

Ernie Dusek, maddest of the merry, mad Duseks, will return to the wars against Ivan Managoff in the feature wrestling bout at Turner's Arena next Thursday night.

Managoff, a consistent winner during the past outdoor season, defeated Joe Cox in last week's feature at the arena.

Navy Varsity Will Play Plebes in Practice Tilt

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 18.—Anticipating stiff opposition from the Plebe eleven, with which it will play under match conditions tomorrow, the coaches did not allow the Navy varsity to scrimmage this afternoon, spending the time on details and formation drills. The Plebes had a two weeks' start on the varsity and are in better condition. They have a powerful line and some fast backs.

Italian, Jewish Star Game Postponed

The fear that the Italian and Jewish teams would be handicapped by the storm last night led to postponement of the inter-racial clash until Tuesday night at the Stadium, decided upon by Managers Sam Scogna and Tank Nitowitz after a half-hour conference.

The team lineups, both of which will be kept secret until the first ball is stossed out, will probably feature such stars as Pepco Barry, Frank Baroni, Willie Wolfe, Len Atkins and Arnold Heft.

Beer Squad to Practice.

The American Beer eleven, 150-pound Capital City champs have scheduled a practice session at 3:30 p. m. today and 1:30 tomorrow on the Rosedale Playground, at Seventeenth and Cramer streets northwest. All last year's players and new candidates are urged to report.

HONORED AT BUCKNELL.

Horce Lowe, Tech High basketball player, was elected president of the freshman class at Bucknell University yesterday. The 18-year-old sharpshooter for the Maroon last season also has been admitted to Phi Kappa Si Fraternity. He is the son of Horace Lowe, multitype operator for the local bureau of the Associated Press.

Time Out! By Chet Smith

MacPhail Out; Rickey May Buy Reds

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, Sept. 18.—Larry S. MacPhail, a showman of the major leagues, resigned to day as vice president and general manager of the Cincinnati Reds, effective November 1, declining to say whether he would continue in baseball.

He emphasized that his resignation was not actuated by any disagreement with other officials of the club. MacPhail asserted his decision was due in part to illness in his family and a desire for rest.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 18.—The Ohio State Journal will say tomorrow that Branch Rickey, vice president and general manager of the St. Louis Cardinal baseball system, and Merrill C. Russell, of Delaware, Ohio, a director of the Columbus Red Birds, will purchase controlling interest in the Cincinnati National League ball club "within the near future."

Rickey would resign from the Cardinal organization upon taking over the Reds, it said.

Latona Meets McElvenny In Finals

Ralph McElvenny, tennis-playing attorney of the Securities and Exchange Commisison, rode into the final round of the fourth annual U. S. Government men's championships yesterday and will meet the defending champion, Tony Latona, today at 3 p. m. on the Potomac Park courts.

The No. 2 seeded player trounced Spencer Howell, former George Washington University player, 6—4, 6—0, and rates about a 50-50 chance of taking the title away from Latona, who has held it for the last two years. McElvenny won the event the first year it was held in 1933.

Latona is also making his bid for his third straight doubles title. Paired with Ed Mather, he will play in the final-round match tomorrow against Arthur Simmons and George Botts, jr., at 3 p. m. Latona and Mather encountered some difficulty in their semifinal encounter yesterday before getting past Stan Haney and Morgan (Happy) Jacob, 6—3, 4—6, 6—1.

Moore to Meet Ryan.

Heavily favored to take the women's title, Sara Moore, of PWA, will meet the defending champion, Mary Ryan, of Department of Interior tomorrow, also at 2 p. m. Miss Ryan, holder of the championship for the last two years, has been saved the task of meeting Miss Moore, a new Government employe, in previous tournaments.

Competition is keen for the team championship, won by a slight margin last year by Department of Treasury, with Securities and Exchange Commission a very close second, and Department of Commerce a close third. Department of Agriculture is thought to have a slender lead in the complicated point score system being used this year.

60 to Start Play Today for Fall Net Crown

Probably the strongest field that ever entered a Washington tennis tournament will begin whittling itself down today in opening round matches of the annual fall open tournament of the Department of Playgrounds. More than 60 able racquet wielders will be gunning for the title now held by Barney Welsh.

The Rockville ace will begin defense of his championship at 4 p. m. against Ben Jaffee on the Potomac Park courts where all the matches but the semi-finals and finals will be played. The last two rounds will be held at the Edgemoor Club, Edgemoor, Md.

Leading the advance on the champion's laurels will be Gilbert Hunt, jr., Wshington's chief other claimant for national recognition. It is with the expectation of a final round classic between Welsh and Hunt that the tournament has taken on more glamour than virtually any tourney of recent years.

Out-of-Town Stars.

A pair of formidable out-of-town entries have joined the list of leading competitors, namely, Harold McGuffin, Philadelphia star, and Frank Goeltz, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa. Hunt's first match, incidentally, will be against Michael Zarrilli, of New York, at 2 p. m.

Welsh is seeded No. 1; Hunt, No 2; Hugh Lynch, No. 3; Tony Latona, No. 4; Tom Markey, No. 5; Ralph McElvenny, No. 6; Tom Mangan, No. 7; and Frank Shore, No. 8.

A first class array of first-round matches stands out conspicuously on the schedule, namely, such encounters as those between Stan McCaskey and Alan Staubly; Moscoe Garnett and Strand Johnsen; Ed Mather and Don Garber; Nate Ritzenberg and Bill Buchanan and Davie Johnson and Spencer Howell.

Many Stocks Shoot Upward As Market Sips Recovery Cup

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Sept. 18.—The stock market took another sip from the recovery cup today and found the taste to its liking. With a fair start on the come-back made yesterday, fresh buying stimulation was derived from business and industrial news and prices of heavy industry leaders were pushed up fractions to 3 or more points. A number of new highs for the past year or longer were recorded in the forward move.

Steels, motors, rails equipments and a wide assortment of specialties gave early impetus to the rise. Oils, coppers and electrical machinery stocks joined the parade, which picked up a little more speed than recently.

Transfers totaled 1,276,000 shares, against 773,370 in the preceding session. The Associated Press average of 60 issues was up .5 of a point at 67.9.

There was quiet profit taking in the morning and in the last hour, but it was not a particularly disturbing element. Of 841 stocks changing hands, 541 advanced, 148 declined and 152 were unchanged.

J. I. Case got up 6½ points, to 155¾ on a small turnover. International Paper & Power preferred gained 8¼, at 47¾; Inland Steel advanced 4¼, at 114¾, and Westinghouse was ahead 3½, at 143.

Steel on Uprising.

Others prominent on the upside included United States Steel, at 71⅝; Bethlehem, 69⅞; Chrysler, 117⅛; General Motors, 67⅞; Santa Fe, 82¾; Union Pacific, 137½; Chesapeake & Ohio, 67⅞; Atlantic Coast Line, 36; International Nickel, 60; Kennecott, 49⅝; American Type Founders, 14; American Locomotive, 33½; Consolidated Oil, 13⅜; Poor & Co., 22⅜; Corn Products, 69⅞; Shell Union Oil, 22½; Montgomery Ward, 49¼; American Smelting, 82⅛; American Commercial Alcohol, 27¼; International Harvester, 78; Deere, 73¼; Firestone Tire, 29; Loew's, 60½; A. M. Byers, 25⅛; Consolidated Edison, 42⅜; Union Carbide, 96½, and Seaboard Oil, 31¾.

The volatile Wright Aeronautic fell back in early transactions following reports the Stock Exchange was "scrutinizing" dealings in this issue because of its gyrations in the past several weeks. The shares rallied in the final hour to close up 3½ points at 139½. Other aviation stocks were narrow.

Bonds Move Higher.

The foreign situation, however, remained a fly in the bullish ointment. The French franc was a matter of concern in banking quarters. At the same time commission houses with European connections noted a substantial pickup in purchases of American securities from London and the Continent.

Spurred by a brisk demand for railroad loans, medium and low priced bonds moved forward in the listed market today.

With activity centering in the domestic corporation division, where volume amounted to about $10,280,000, face value, against $7,830,000 Thursday, turnover of all bonds reached $12,648,000 compared with $9,557,000. It was the largest day's business in more than a week.

St. Paul 5s were carried to 22¾, up 1½; Missouri Pacific 5s to 41¾, up ¾, and "Katy" 5s to 89½, up ⅝. Minor fractions were added by Northwestern 4¾s, at 14⅜; Rock Island general 4s, at 38⅜, and Baltimore & Ohio 4s, at 80.

Liens of carriers tapping Florida were conspicuously favored, as this year's citrus crop escaped the violent hurricane sweeping up the Atlantic Coast from its point of entry in the Carolinas. Seaboard Air Line bonds moved up ¼ to 1½ points on good volume. Atlantic Coast Line issues were unchanged to nearly a point higher, and Florida East Coast bonds gained minor fractions to nearly a point.

The approach of cold weather together with recent strong measures against instances of bootlegging of coal has stimulated buying interest in obligations of anthracite and bituminous producers. Hudson Coal 5s extended their advance 1 point to 52; Reading & Philadelphia Coal & Iron 5s gained 1¼ to 46⅝, the 6s rose ⅝ to 28¼, and Consolidation Coal 5s listed ⅛ to 51⅛.

Bonds with stock privileges advanced sharply in conformity with gains in the share market. American Type Founders 5s moved up 7½ to 140, Studebaker 6s gained 4 at 115 and Allis-Chalmers 4s rose 2⅝ to 155⅜.

The Associated Press averages for 20 rails gained .2 of a point to new high ground for the year at 96.2. The other classifications were uneven, 10 industrials losing .1 of a point to 103.3, foreigns .3 of a point to 70.5. The 10 utilities gained .3 of a point to 102.6 and the low yield group lost .1 of a point to 112.6.

Chartered Life Underwriters Open Sessions

Committees Are Assigned by DeForce, New President.

The first meeting of the fall season was held Thursday by the District of Columbia Chapter of Chartered Life Underwriters, with James A. DeForce, the new president, presiding. The other newly elected officers are Paul Sleeper, vice president, and Frank Roach, secretary and treasurer. Committees named by the president for the year: Educational, Joseph A. Marr, Earl W. Sapp, Harold D. Krafft, J. Alan Maphis; program, Carl Smith Dow and H. Lawrence Choate, and publicity, Russell Shelk and H. Cochran Fisher.

Announcement was made by the American College of Life Underwriters that of the 980 candidates who took examinations for chartered life underwriter in June, 96 received C. L. U. and 47 others passed all examinations. Among these were James H. Benner and William B. Penn, both of Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co.

The guest speaker was Albert E. Rogers, headmaster of Sidwell Friends School, who spoke on "Life Insurance and Character Training for Children." He stressed the need for broader, more practical training for children to acquaint them with the subjects of social and religious understanding, the meaning of social security, an idea of the cost of living, personal and home budgets.

Morris Plan Bankers.

Willard G. Barker, president of the Morris Plan Bank of Washington, left today for Hot Springs, Va., where he will attend the seventeenth convention of the Morris Plan Bankers Association at the Homestead, September 20-23.

The convention, attended by approximately 250 Morris Plan executives from all sections of the country, will hear addresses by prominent speakers and discuss important matters pertaining to their widespread business.

Dr. Claude L. Benner, vice president and economist of the Continental-American Life Insurance Co., will deliver an important message on "Present Day Economics." Dr. Luther Harr, secretary of banking of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and Frank Totten, vice president of the Chase National Bank, New York, are among others scheduled for addresses.

Bache Review.

J. S. Bache & Co. announce that the new Treasury 2¾s of 1956-59 are currently selling at 101 8-32 on a when-issued basis to yield approximately 2.67 per cent to the first call date. The heavy oversubscription of the $400,000,000 offerings was regarded as an indication of the continued demand for investment securities. Subject to developments outside of the United States, the course of the domestic high grade bond market appears favorable for the intermediate future.

Jumper Stars Vie for Show Title Today

Lacquer Lady in Strong Field Seeking Spring Valley Gold Cup.

Outstanding equine aces of the Capital, Maryland and Virginia will combat for the coveted gold cup at the second annual Spring Valley Horse Show today to raise funds for the city's blind.

Following the pony classes, which will begin at 10 o'clock in the ring at Fordham road and Tilden street, more than 100 of the finest performers that have ever graced a local show will swing into battle for the handsome trophy, emblematic of the grand championship of the meet.

Among the standouts in the melee will be King Dominant, which won the first leg on the cup for Mr. and Mrs. George P. Plummer last year; Lacquer Lady, owned by Fenton M. Fadeley; C. Emery Galliher's Applejack; Miss Margaret Cotter's Rocksie, Miss A. J. Carrabelli's Sun Glema, Mrs. D. N. Lee's Glory Road and Loro and others.

Lacquer Lady will carry a particularly fine record into the contest. Last week she won the grand championship at the Fairfax Horse Show, while her spring and summer triumphs include the championship of the Maryland Fox Hunters, University of Maryland and many other shows and the grand jumper title at the Riding and Hunt Club's four-show series.

In Applejack, Lacquer Lady and King Dominant will have another powerful rival. Applejack has been going great guns of late and won the open jumping championship at the National Capital Horse Show in May.

Fake Eye Cures Target of U. S. In Round-Up

25 to 35 Pseudo Doctors Already Are Indicted; Others Sought.

By the Associated Press.

Postal inspectors said last night they were "rounding up" a Nation-wide ring of racketeers who, during the last several years were described as having preyed upon hundreds of persons suffering from eye maladies.

The officials said indictments had been brought in various parts of the country against between 25 and 35 pseudo doctors who allegedly have been using the mails to defraud.

The persons indicted, not all of whom have been taken into custody, have been operating, according to Postoffice Department officials, in Massachusetts, Virginia, Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri.

Obtained Addresses.

Several methods were employed by the alleged racketeers, but the commonest, one official said, was to obtain addresses of persons suffering from eye ailments.

These addresses were apparently obtained from firms supplying eyeglasses or from salesmen, he said.

Working in pairs, two men would then visit the person, offer to perform "an emergency operation," accept money, and then disappear before the patient removed his bandages.

One Duped of $9,000.

In at least one instance, an elderly woman was duped of $9,000, but in most cases the amounts ran from an inconsiderable sum to $2,500, officials said.

One pair was said by postal inspectors to have told patients they were in possession of an electric belt, invented by a German, which if worn for a short time would cure certain eye ailments. Only four belts were in existence, they are said to have told their victims, and therefore a substantial "deposit" was required.

Inspectors said they believed approximately a hundred persons are engaged in the fraudulent practice at the present time. They expressed confidence the present indictments named the ringleaders.

Tension Is Eased In Lettuce Strike

Salinas, Calif., Sept. 18 (AP).—Tension eased in strike-harassed Salinas today when steps were taken toward conciliation in the walkout of 3,200 union lettuce workers.

Sources close to Gov. Frank F. Merriam disclosed in Sacramento that lettuce shippers and strikers would meet shortly in the first "real attempt" to mediate the 14-day violence-marked walkout.

A mobilization call to 1,500 deputized citizens this morning momentarily stirred apprehension over possible further violence, but the city continued quiet. However, 250 deputies remained on special duty.

The State Labor Federation convention at Sacramento, which had called upon Merriam to report today on progress toward a peaceful settlement or face a recall movement, decided later to give the chief executive more time.

Girl, 15, Accused In Abduction Plot

Moncton, New Brunswick, Sept. 18 (AP).—Charges of abducting a child in part of the "Baby Doll" plot involving deaths of three persons were filed today against 15-year-old Frances Bannister.

The girl, who under threat of contempt proceedings gave testimony used by the State to convict her two brothers of the killings, was arraigned in juvenile court. She will be given a private hearing next Tuesday, the day before her brothers are under sentence to be hanged.

Mrs. Bannister already has started serving a 3½-year sentence for her part in what the State charged was an attempt to extort money from two men with whom she had been friendly. First a life-sized doll was used, the State contended, and then the infant Betty Lake was produced as Mrs. Bannister's child.

The father, Philip Lake, his housekeeper, and another child were killed after the abduction, it was testified at the trial of the brothers.

Richman's Plane At Harbor Grace On New York Hop

By the United Press.

Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, Sept. 18.—Grimy and bearded, Harry Richman and Dick Merrill landed here at 7:09 p. m. (Newfoundland time) in their Lady Peace monoplane today, and, to show the outside world that they had been reconciled, Richman, a Broadway crooner, broke into song.

The transatlantic fliers arrived from Musgrave Harbor, 140 miles north of here, where their $95,000 plane was fished out of the mud bank. On the take-off the ship injured a spectator. They prepared to leave for New York Sunday to complete their round-trip flight to England.

The fliers, looking like Arctic explorers, were accompanied in a second ship by Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, who came up from New York with a crew of five to rescue the luckless Lady Peace.

The so-called feud between the fliers began 6,500 feet above the Atlantic during a storm off Newfoundland, when the ship nose-dived for the water and Richman dropped 500 gallons of gas overboard. The crash followed in the Musgrave Harbor bog, and bitter words were exchanged before Rickenbacker arrived.

"We're a happy family now," Merrill said.

Rickenbacker arrived at Musgrave Harbor by boat yesterday and aided in getting the Lady Peace out of the mud. The fliers had spent three days in Musgrave living on codfish and berries.

Presidential Poll
Contest Column

This column will be conducted daily until October 30, closing date of The Washington Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Contest. Questions of contestants will be answered and other information, helpful to the contestant in predicting the winner of the election and the States he will carry, will be supplied from time to time.

$1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded 34 contest winners, with $500 for first prize. The contest closes at midnight, Friday, October 30.

• • • •

Q. Is it necessary that the 250-word letter, describing the method by which contestants in The Post's 1936 Presidential Poll Contest reached predictions on which candidate would win the election and what States he would carry, be typewritten?

A. No. It is only necessary that the letter be legible and that it accompany a Presidential Prediction Form, properly filled out and bearing the name and address of the contestant. Prediction Forms will be printed every Sunday in The Post between now and the closing date of the contest, October 30, 1936.

• • • •

Q. Is there any limit on the number of entries each contestant may make in the contest?

A. Yes. One entry, only, to each contestant.

• • • •

Q. Which States have the largest number of electorial votes?

A. New York (47), Pennsylvania (36), Illinois (29), Ohio (26), Texas (23), California (22), Michigan (19), Massachusetts (17), New Jersey (16) and Missouri (15). Among them, these ten States control 250 of the 531 electorial votes.

• • • •

• • • •

Q. Is it possible, in a Presidential election, for a candidate to receive more votes than his opponent and yet lose the election?

A. Yes. In each of the first two America Speaks Landon-Roosevelt polls such a situation, had the election been held at the time either of these polls was taken, was indicated. In the first poll President Roosevelt was shown to be carrying 27 States, with 51.8 per cent of the popular vote of the two major parties, while Gov. Landon held only 21 States, with 48.8 per cent of the popular vote of the two major parties. But the States where the Kansas Governor was stronger than his opponent account for 272 electoral votes (more than enough to win), while the other 21 States have only 259 electoral votes. A similar situation obtained in the second Landon-Roosevelt poll, with Landon carrying 20 States and 276 electoral votes and the President (despite a popular vote majority) trailing with 28 States and only 255 electoral votes.

Destroyer Fanning Finally Launched

New York, Sept. 18.—The U. S. Destroyer Fanning was launched today despite a strike of 1,500 hands at the yards of the Staten Island Drydock Co. and a heavy eastern gale.

The strikers, who had delayed the launching two days, were kept outside the yards by 20 uniformed patrolmen.

Miss Cora Marsh, of New London, Conn., a great-great-granddaughter of the late Lieut. Nathaniel Fanning, after whom the ship was named, broke a bottle of champagne across its bow.

Chicago Court Clerk Indicted as Embezzler

Chicago, Sept. 18.—An indictment charging Frank V. Zintak, clerk of the superior court of Cook County (Chicago), with embezzling $22,560 in escrow funds was returned today before Chief Justice Michael L. McKinley.

Judge McKinley set arraignment for Monday but said he would remain in court today so Zintak could be arraigned if he surrendered before that time.

Stephen Love, attorney for Zintak, said his client would surrender within 24 hours.

On the Air Today

Charles Butterworth is being whispered noisily in some of the under-the-table material originating in New York as the bright star just coming over the horizon in the radio sky.

It is pointed out that the deadpan comic will earn the title of Mad Hatter of the Microphone because he has a method instead of stale jokes. His method—the vague, absent-minded professor type—is just as definite a method as Wynn's or Cantor's.

Of course it is to be remembered that Charley Butterworth is really an old hand at making mountains out of ordinary occurences in everyday life. Once he held the stage in a smart Broadway revue merely asking a man if he cared for salt!

Butterworth has a manner, as have Fred Allen, Phil Baker and Jack Benny, and these are the comedians who do not refer to their files of Whiz Bangs for their weekly gags. They can create laughs and twist them out of ordinary situations.

She's prima donna of the new "Ziegfeld Follies." The "Cheerio" commercial program, which came along after ten years of unsponsored air appearances, will be in the interests of an instrument benefitting the hard of hearing. . . . Stoopnagle and Budd have signed Harry Von Zell as announcer, stooge and general utility for their new series beginning October 4. The comedians thought so well of Von Zell after a summer in "Town Hall Tonight" together that they decided to make a threesome of it this winter. Von Zell will continue with Fred Allen in "Town Hall," however.

Million Farms Slated to Have Power by 1937

Wide Expansion Predicted by REA, Mostly Due to Private Utilities.

Under impetus of a Government-financed farm power program, and intense activity by private utilities, there will be 1,000,000 highline-electrified farms in the country at the start of next year, the Rural Electrification Administration estimated yesterday.

Although the REA has given at least preliminary approval to about $25,000,000 in loans for extension of rural lines, officials admitted this figure was negligible when compared to rural lines financed by power companies themselves. They claim credit however, for "starting the ball rolling."

Figures made public by the Edison Electric Institute show that in the first six months of 1936 more farms were connected to electric lines than in any 12-month period since 1929. The E. E. I. estimated 71,243 farms were given electric service from January to June of this year, bringing the total of electrically-connected farms to 860,000.

Officials said the $25,000,000 in loans approved by the Rural Electrification Administration, will supply power to 75,000 rural users in 35 States.

About $15,000,000 of this amount came from old funds, and $10,000,000 from the $50,000,000 allotted the REA for 1936 under the Norris bill. With a 3 per cent interest charge and a 20-year amortization arrangement the loans go to many forms of organizations, electric co-operative associations, power companies, municipal systems, power districts and State rural electrification authorities.

The REA estimates it takes an average of $300 to carry power lines to farmhouses, and about $1,000 to electrify an average farm, bringing the cost of farm power far above the urban level. Although REA has authority under the Norris bill to make loans for farm electrical equipment, it has authorized none to date, leaving this field to the Electric Farm and Home Authority, a TVA subsidiary. Nor has any REA money to date been spent for actual generation of power.

The agency estimates rural power financed by the REA will cost the farmer an average somewhere between $5 and $6 a month, or between $60 and $75 a year, out of which the cost of connection, maintenance and repair of lines, current, interest and amortization of loans would be paid. This estimated charge would not cover farm electrical equipment.

Illinois is cited as an instance of how rural power development has gone forward under increased farm demand for power, without actual financial aid from REA. During the first seven months of 1930, 1,951 miles of rural line construction has been authorized in Illinois, as compared with 118 miles in 1935 and only 2 miles the year before.

General Yen's Barber Works Under 4 Pistols

Taiyuanfu, North China, Sept. 19 (AP).—Shaving to most men may be just a nuisance, but to Gen. Yen Hsi-Shan, local satrap, and his barber, it's downright terrifying.

The general wants to make sure that his official barber's razor won't "slip." So four members of the general's bodyguard stand by with pistols pointed at the head of the perspiring barber.

The barber says he didn't ask for the job, but was "selected" by the bodyguard.
